The Fullerton Horror.

It is now nearly two years since the details of the shocking quintuple murder known as the Fullerton, Nance county horror, were published in the BEE. It was in the early part of the winter of 1884. Four adults and one child were found murdered. The perpetrator was and still is unknown, but suspicion now is firmly settled upon the man who in all probability did the deed, and who for a long time, it was thought had also fallen a victim in the butchery. This is the man Fullerton, who has not been heard of since that time. The theory of the crime, held up to the present time, is that Fullerton, who was the third to fall in the bloody work with his wife, had been gotten out of the way in order to remove the possibility of his ever being charged with the crime, as a witness in England. That theory has now fallen to the ground, and another has taken its place. It is held by everybody in the vicinity of the scene of the murder, and bears a plausible character which other lacks. It makes its first appearance in the BEE, and was received through Honorable John Kuhl from John Whitely the next morning of Fullerton.

Fullerton owned 160 acres in Nance county. He was living with a man named Meyer. Each took turns of a week in attending to the domestic duties of their home. In that home were certain chattels upon which Fullerton had given a mortgage for $200. The time of the payment of this sum was near at hand, and Fullerton was anxiously expecting money from the east to satisfy it. He went several times to Central City and Fullerton to see if the money had arrived, but only to find that it had not come. This made him nervous and irritable. He even resented his neighbors to inquire for the desired letter for him when he was unable to go to either of these towns himself. On the Saturday night before the murder Fullerton inquired of Mr. Gates if he had brought a letter for him, but was informed that nothing had arrived with his address. The next day, Sunday, was the day upon which Meyer was to come to take charge of the household affairs for the following week. That day, Fullerton was playing croquet. On his way home he stopped at Gates' and asked the latter if he had seen Meyer that day, and was told that Meyer had not been around. Although naturally an easy-going man, when aroused it was known that Fullerton was possessed of most resentful and violent feelings. These he began to show before he left Gates' place by bitter denunciations of his conduct and the neglect of his duty. He then started for home. Later Meyer made his appearance at Gates' and asked if Fullerton had been seen. He was informed that Fullerton had just left and was in a very angry mood. "Yes," said Meyer, "I suppose he'll make it warm for me," and then started for home. Fullerton quarreled, and later, when the quarrel was over, he shot Fullerton through the chin and top of the head.

Perceval was one of the nearest neighbors. Early in the morning a man of his name, Baird, who was a friend of Meyer's, called to see the latter, while Fullerton was digging a pit to bury him in. Baird discovered the murder and immediately ran to the sheriff to spread the alarm, when Fullerton shot him from behind. The body was not found for some time, and was, then, supposed to be that of Fullerton. That night, Monday, the sheriff and just returned from town, and had driven his horses to the barn, where Fullerton asked if he had any news for him from town. The sheriff stated that he had not. Whereupon, Fullerton who had now become a demon in heart, in search of money to make his escape, shot Perceval as he was carrying his arms full of hay to feed his horses. The murdered man was thrown upon the hay he had been holding and never stirred. Fullerton then went to the Perceval's house. He knew the latter had a tin containing $100. He determined to secure its contents. To do this he killed Mrs. Fullerton, who was present at the time, as also her child who was but fifteen months old. He then rifled the box, and with the blood of six human beings, as it were, dripping from his hands, made his escape. His tracks have been so effectively covered that he has not been traced since.

Mr. Gates' opinion as to his whereabouts is that he has either already committed suicide, or that he has gone on a surveying expedition to Alaska. He is rather inclined to the latter view, the fact is almost certain that he is up north, because Fullerton several times spoke to him of going. The one hundred and sixty acres belonging to Fullerton are now used by ex-Lt. Gov. Carns, while the mortgage upon his chattels was purchased by Central City people.

BOSLER, DEFENDANT.

A New Question Raised in the Land Syndicate Injunction.

The injunction suit of Milton Rogers in the sale of the property of the South Omaha Land Syndicate, to restrain the trustees of the same from disposing of the property in question, came up before Judge Wakley yesterday morning. Messrs. Cowin and Pritchett appeared for Rogers, Mr. Woolworth for himself and three trustees, and Mr. Thurston for Mr. Bosler. Gen. Cowin said that the instruments they had filed, he thought, would be considered sufficient for what had been asked until something of a denial was filed by the other side. Mr. Woolworth said that such denials, affecting the statements made by the attorneys for the petition, had been filed in the morning. Gen. Cowin said that he was not aware of the fact and that they would ask the usual time to consider the affidavits. Mr. Thurston then stated that he desired to have Mr. Bosler made a defendant with the property or securing interest on the bonds and other matters rendered necessary by the business of the association would be injurious. Gen. Cowin thought the court's idea

THE ALBRIGHT ANNEX AUCTION.

Four Hundred Finely-Located Lots to be Knocked Down to the Highest Bidder.

The activity in Omaha real estate continues with unabated vigor. Thousands of persons are making investments either for future homes or speculative purposes. The indications all point to a steady rise in real estate for the next three years at least, and in all probability for the next five years. The city is growing very rapidly in population and wealth. New business men are seeking locations for business houses and for homes. New enterprises, both public and private, are being developed every day. A large amount of grading, paving, surveying and other street improvement work is being done, viaducts are being built, the cable car company has begun work, and the street car lines are being extended in every direction. Thus it will be seen that everything is combining to make Omaha a great city, and that now is the time to invest in real estate. Numerous fortunes have already been made in a very short time in Omaha real estate, and the opportunities are just as good to-day, if not better, for safe and profitable investments. All that is needed is the proper selection of the places to invest in. A splendid opportunity is about to be offered to investors and speculators in what has been named

An Important Question Brought up by a Law-Suit.

A decision was received yesterday from Judge Brewer of the United States circuit court of this district concerning an important suit recently commenced against the commissioners of Dakota county by the C. St. P. M. & O. road. The case is especially interesting because it revives memories of treaties made thirty or forty years ago with the noble red men of the territory of Nebraska.

REAL ESTATE MEN MEET.

Exchange Compliments and Excited Present Arms.

Wednesday evening a lively scene took place in the office of the C. E. Mayne Real Estate & Trust company. Alfred Arneemann, of Paulsen & Co., called upon Mr. Mayne to settle up a little commission to which Paulsen & Co. lay claim. It seems that Paulsen & Co. had on their list a piece of property which Mr. Mayne either wanted to buy for himself or sell to another party. It was agreed between Mr. Mayne and the other firm that the commission, which was to amount to $500 would be divided equally. Mr. Mayne called on Paulsen & Co. and left with them a check for $125 as their share of the commission. This was not satisfactory, and in the evening, Arneemann called at Mayne's for the remaining $375. Some high words passed between them, during which Mayne tried to convince Arneemann that the sale had not brought enough to warrant the commission claimed, and in proof of this referred Arneemann to his books. Arneemann made an insulting allusion to Mayne's books coupled with other remarks, and Arneemann left the office with a sore leg, caused by his being struck with the seal.

DISTRICT COURT.

Judge Neville's Doings on the Bench this Morning.

Yesterday morning Judge Neville granted a temporary injunction to restrain a tenant of Mr. Zabriskie, in South Omaha, from moving upon or occupying property belonging to the latter. The case will be heard on next Monday. Mr. Kummerow, the vendor which will leave for St. Joe this evening, will comprise the following: Louis Heimrod; 1st speaker; Henry Kummerow, teacher; Wm. Schultz, Robt. Rosenzweig, Frank Lange, Fred Elasser, Hugo Loeffler, C. Rohrbach, C. Gromme, August Doyle, Clark Albee, Tony Meravee, H. Beselin, W. Hoedel.

INJURED IN THE CAB.

Wednesday a destructive tornado visited the town of Webster on the line of the C. M. & St. P. road, and is described by Mr. A. Clubb, of Sigourney, to have been particularly destructive of the crops in that vicinity. At the time of its passage over the town mentioned a train on the Milwaukee road was standing at the depot. The snow fence on one side of the track was raised up by the wind and smashed against the cars. One of the boards shot through the window of the cab of the engine and striking the fireman across the forehead inflicted a deep and dangerous cut and rendered the man insensible, so that his place had to be taken by another.

Twenty-four young men of Omaha have signed an agreement to enlist as volunteers in the campaign against Mexico, provided war is declared against that nation.

POOR MEN'S SIGNS.

Why Should They be Removed and Rich Men's Unnoticed?

To the Editor: As you generally act impartially, and want justice done to all, irrespective of race or color or previous condition of servitude or politics, I would like to know about an order issued by Marshal Cummings, about two months ago in regard to clearing the streets and sidewalks of business signs of all descriptions; also: trunks, barber poles, etc. Let us see how this law has been enforced by our city fathers and our noble guardians of the peace. They notified all shoemakers, cobblers, and barbers, men who were just barely making a living, to remove everything from the sidewalk that showed any sign of their business, so that a passer by would not mistake that any kind of business was carried on at that place, so that all they have to do is to walk up to the court house and pay their taxes. Now, that I have presented the poor man's side of the question, let us see how the law is enforced. Sloan & Johnson have 377 barrels of salt tied up, three or four barrels high on the high way corner Tenth and Farnam, and forty-three barrels of syrup. Peck & Bros. have seven barrels of vinegar on Tenth street, barrels, boxes, crates, watermelons, bananas, etc., on Farnam street. Amos McVittie, corner Eleventh and Farnam, has barrels of salt, chicken coops, empty boxes, empty barrels, one old ice-box, one old stove, and a lot of other things, a lot of barbed fence wire in front of vacant lots, 1100-1111 Harney street. Gratton & Drummond, Harney street, near Fourteenth, have eight carriages on the sidewalk, and a lot of other things. Murphy, opposite, has six carriages on the sidewalk, three of them with new paint drying. D. M. Steele & Co., on Fifteenth and Levee, have 120 barrels of salt, and nine barrels of vinegar on the sidewalk. Garneau's Cracker company have lard, salt, syrup, etc.; Omaha Cornice works, 310 South Twelfth street, have cornices stored on the sidewalk. Western Cornice works, cornices stored on sidewalk; D. Fitzpatrick, southeast corner Twelfth and Howard, has general storage of all steam boilers, carbon tires, crockery, crates, old iron, etc. Now, these are only a few of the many cases that I could mention to show the injustice of this ordinance. Now, they are going to enforce this sidewalk ordinance, why not serve all alike and not try to injure poor men's business and let the rich get the benefit of it? They are going to enforce this ordinance, why not serve all alike and not try to injure poor men's business and let the rich get the benefit of it? They are going to enforce this ordinance, why not serve all alike and not try to injure poor men's business and let the rich get the benefit of it?

Releasing Prisoners.

Jailer Joe Miller, of the county jail has turned out thirteen of the city prisoners who were sent up by Judge Sigourney to serve out sentence for minor offenses, such as drunkenness, vagrancy, etc. These fellows were released in accordance with the terms of the state law, which says that a prisoner shall be confined one day for every $3 of fine, and which has just been brought into prominence by the decision of County Judge McCulloch, in the case of William Groven, who was released a day or so ago on a writ of habeas corpus. The county does not care to hold these city prisoners any longer than necessary, and accordingly the commissioners have given Sheriff Coburn instructions to turn them off at the rate of $2 a day. Hitherto the county has been to allow the prisoner one day for every dollar of his fine. General Cowin, the county attorney, will deliver very shortly an opinion on the constitutionality of Judge McCulloch's decision bearing on the matter, and until then the county jailer will abide by the instructions given to Sheriff Coburn.
