necker, or got some one to tie it for him, but he will on no account get a ready-made white tie. The moderately fashionable man's shirt front will be of linen or cotton. If of linen, it may have only a single pleat, being a "pine-board" front, or it may be in numerous narrow pleats.

The overcoats that fashionable men will wear this winter are not very different from those that were worn last year. The single-breasted "Chester field" and the double-breasted heavy overcoat will be worn by polite society, and the double-breasted overcoat with a cap will be worn by the masses.

The crown of this year's Derby is more fitting than that of last year, and the top is more curved. The brim has the same shape as that of the silk hat. Black Derbys are going to be as fashionable as ever, but for those who like light colors, there is a choice between the straw-brim and the manilla-brim, the latter of which is the "very latest thing out," and is going to be much worn.

The watch-fob will not be brought back this year, but a chain may be worn by the man who is a dandy with a dress suit. But it should not be the chain that he wears ordinarily. The dress chain is a light, dainty little bit of jewelry that is worn with a coat, and is just long enough to reach comfortably from the wearer's button-hole to his watch pocket.

The only article of men's attire that this year is to be more conspicuous than last year is the cane that they will swing. Gold and silver headed canes are still correct, but they must be grotesque and outlandish, the work of the "curly" hand will remain, but the natural wood head will disappear, as will the plain silver head, and grotesque figures of ducks or frogs or moles will find their way into the hands of the dandies where the old wooden ones used to be.

For those men who have to get new dress suits this year there is little choice of material. The white suit is made of blue-black diagonal cloth, blue-black or navy blue diagonal cloth, or black or untrimmed. Many waistcoats, however, will be of black or cream colored silk or satin, embroidered on the collar down to the edges, and on the pocket flaps, and those who think they would like that sort of waistcoat will find themselves backed up by fashion.

MURDER!! Diphtheria is again making its annual visitation. Ten years' trial of DR. FOS. JEFFERS' REMEDY for that fatal malady has demonstrated its infallibility in every case of it and cure. If you permit your children to die with diphtheria, "their blood is upon your head."

There will be little change this season in the gloves that fashionable men will wear. The hands will be covered by heavy tan-colored gloves, just as they were last winter. Heavy stitching, either in black silk or in silk which matches the color of the gloves, will ornament their backs.

This year the quietness of the suit necessitates a brilliant scarf. Broad "four-in-hand" in solid colors, in stripes, or in solid colors with large spots, is to be the fashionable style of scarf. For those who do not or cannot tie their own scarves, the same patterns are made up in different styles.

With a dress suit a gentleman who is reasonably fashionable will wear a plain white shirt and standing collar, with a black silk or white necktie, and a necktie. He will, of course, tie his own
