JACK HANLEY'S RELEASE.

The Well Known Pugilist to be Set at Liberty To-day.

OMAHA SPORTS WELCOME HIM.

A Review of the Particulars of the Fell-Hanley Fight—Brevities Personals, and Other Local News.

Hanley's Release.

At 9 o'clock to-day the doors of the state penitentiary at Lincoln will swing open and Jack Hanley, one of the best known and popular sporting men in the west, will step forth a free man from the walls within which he has been confined for a year and a half. He will be greeted by Ed Rothery, Jack Morrison, Duncan McDonald, A. S. Forbes, Herb Rothery, Baby Barnes, Johnny Clow and other members of the sporting fraternity who went to Lincoln last night to be present when he is released. It is proposed to bring Hanley to Omaha, where a complimentary benefit of some kind will be tendered him at an early date. The offense for which Hanley has been doing penance was his part as a principal in the Fell-Hanley prize fight, which took place at Clearwater, in Saunders county, in May, 1885. It was one of the most sensational affairs of the kind that ever occurred in the state, and will bear a brief review. The fight had been announced for a long time before it took place. As it was the first fight in many years that was announced to take place in the vicinity of Omaha, quite an amount of interest was aroused among the people who patronize such entertainments. Fell, the man who was matched against Hanley, was comparatively unknown here. He had been brought here by a man named Al. Masterson, who was then the manager of what was known as the Turf Exchange, on Douglas street, opposite the Millard hotel. The place long since went into bankruptcy, and Morrison, who was endeavoring to build up the affair and establish a pool room on other people's money, went to other parts. During the state fair he was dealing in a gambling house in Lincoln, where he is now engaged. Fell's first achievement here was with Prof. Smith, the leading glove artist, who, however, was not a very remarkable man. Yet he was esteemed to be possessed of more science than Fell, and, it was thought, would knock the latter out. Smith, however, early in the fight received a round arm blow in the back, between the spine and ribs, which sadly interferred with his health at the moment, causing him to retire and preventing him from responding when the call of time was made.

This gave Fell some prominence and the sporting men began to look around for a new man to set against him. The match was finally agreed upon by the representatives of himself and Hanley, who at the time was out in Colorado, where he had fought several battles and attained to quite a distinction. He had previously been a favorite in Omaha, where he had often put on the gloves to the satisfaction of the spectators.

The scene of the Fell-Hanley fight was kept a secret. For a long time, it was thought the engagement would take place in the vicinity of O'Neill, but that place was abandoned because of the expense which necessarily attend its selection. Iowa was also mentioned, but finally abandoned, because it was thought the interference from both the Nebraska and Iowa sides would be too great to overcome. Finally the night before the fight arrived, and even then but a few interested people knew where the ring was to be staked. All the parties who intended to be present, met with a host of others at the Turf exchange. Here whisky was imbibed in copious quantities, and before midnight a number of the crowd were in anything but a state of sobriety. Among those present a number of strangers, though visaged fellows, who had achieved unenviable reputations in all the walk of illegitimate enterprise. There were fellows who would not hesitate to use the bludgeon, knife or revolver on but slight provocation. These had come from a number of the river cities, as well as from the mining regions in Missouri, where Fell had worked before he was brought here to fight. When some of the leading gamblers and sportsmen of the city saw the crowd, and the condition of inebriety in which many of its members were, they got together, and coming to the conclusion that trouble was promised, turned away and refused to attend the fight.

Shortly after midnight it was announced that a train would leave the Union Pacific depot at 1 o'clock in the morning to take spectators to the fight. An immediate rush was made to the place mentioned. Some went on foot, others in carriages, many slinking down the by-ways, fearful of arrest, and others declining to board the cars until they commenced to move, lest they might be apprehended for abetting an unlawful undertaking.

It had rained early in the evening, and during a part of the night. The streets were covered with water and the night damp and cold. Overcoats were luxuries and gossamers were worth gold. When the shivering crowd filed into the cars, each member showed a ticket which cost him $10, and of these there fewer than 200.

The train consisted of two passenger coaches which had been in the business for about half a century, and a way car, which brought up the rear.

Shortly after 1 o'clock the train pulled out, and went slowly toward its destination. It had not been many minutes under way when a "scrap" occurred, and one of the contestants emerged from the scuffle with a nose about the size of an elephant's trunk, and a pair of eyes which caused him to revel in darkness during the rest of the trip. At Papillion, a fellow who had not provided himself with a ticket, was unceremoniously projected into the outer darkness, with the impression of a boot behind him.

At intervals along other fights occurred, so many indeed, that among about a dozen of the excursionists, the fellow who could not boast a facial disfiguration was badly offended.

The two contestants were picked up at Waterloo and Valley and after innumerable delays, every one of which, suspicious people thought, had been brought about to secure the arrest of the excursionists, the train shot down the Republican valley branch about daylight, and stopped about a quarter of a mile on the other side of the Platte. There the ring was pitched. The morning was very cold, the grass wet, and the sun seemed powerless to effect a change in the temperature for hours.

Hanley and Fell remained in the cars until the ring had been pitched, and at a signal left their quarters. Fell being covered with a blanket and looking like an Omaha Indian in holiday attire. Hanley was covered with a coat, though it was thrown over his shoulders, and his fighting costume did not succeed in keeping him comfortable. Two hours were consumed in electing a referee. In that time fifteen fights were averted by the merest accidents, and during that time the principals were exposed to the chilling blasts which were sweeping over the prairie.

Hanley's friends were in the minority, while Fell's were bold, noisy, supplied with money, and solid on their principal. This was shown by one of them putting a hundred-dollar bill in Fell's hands, with which the latter walked around the ring and offered to bet that he would win the fight. He found no takers. Hanley saw immediately that if he should win the fight it would cost him his life, because Fell's friends showed that they were bound to have their money back at any hazard.

The referee was at length selected and the fight commenced. Hanley displayed excellent science and reserve, while Fell was awkward but impetuous. He forced the fighting with bull-dog pertinacity and got heavily pounded all over the body, while Hanley's ear showed a slight abrasion. The end of each round was accomplished with a clinch and a fall with Hanley on top. One round lasted about half a second, Hanley striking Fell a sledge hammer blow in the ribs which raised the latter off his feet and sent him ploughing through the mud. This aroused the strongest indignation on the part of Fell's friends, who increased the abuse they had been heaping upon Hanley. Cries of foul were raised incessantly and one of Fell's backers got inside the ring with malicious intent, when one of the Hanley men remonstrated. This led to a fight, in which half a dozen men pitched onto the Hanley man, who to save himself, ran, followed by a host of others. Clow, of Denver, took part in the chase to see that fair play was done, when he became the object of the chase and finally came to a stand with a revolver, which caused the others to halt. The crowd then broke up and returned to the ring, where the contestants continued the fight as if nothing had taken place. Every round caused cries of foul, and at the end of the fifteenth, where it was apparent that Fell was badly winded and in a few minutes would be completely at the mercy of Hanley, the former's friends jumped into the ring, pulled him out and claimed the fight. Hanley was on the scratch ready for the next round, but he had no one to fight. The stakeholder was terrorized and surrendered the first money to Fell. The party then broke up the ring, took to the cars and started for home. At every station the party was met by gaping rustics, who seemed most anxious to learn all about the fight and see the principals. But the curiosity was but lightly gratified.

At Papillion Fell slunk away, waited for the Missouri Pacific and went south that noon.

When the train was within about a mile of Millard the old feeling which had been engendered in the fight between the partizans culminated in a row. Guns were drawn, and when the train reached the depot at that place three of the excursionists had been shot, and those who could do so climbed on the engine jumped off the cars and ran as fast as possible out of danger. Some hired buggies and drove into town, others waited for the next train, while a few again boarded the train and road to the stock yards, where, with the exception of a half a dozen, all got off and walked into town. When the train reached this city, a doctor from Council Bluffs, a printer of this city and a BEE reporter alone remained. The rest feared that the train would be met at the depot by the officers, and sought to evade arrest.

Hanley remained around, finally accepting second money. A few days later he was arrested at Plattsmouth, taken to Wahoo the county seat of Saunders, where the fight had taken place, was tried and sentenced to the penitentiary for the term which he has now served.

Safe Blowers.

When Charles Hellwig opened his saloon at 2215 Cuming street yesterday morning he found that the place had been visited by burglars. An entrance had been effected through the rear door by breaking it from its hinges. They then broke the knob from the safe door by the use of a sledge-hammer, which they left on the floor, and opened the safe by blowing out the combination with a powder blast. Their labor was all for naught, however, as the money in the safe consisted of twenty five-cent pieces. Either disgusted by the smallness of their find or frightened away, they left the building without taking any other property.

Visscher's Lecture.

On Tuesday evening Will H. Visscher, the well known poet, journalist and humorist, will lecture at Boyd's opera house on the subject, "Sixty Minutes in the War." Mr. Visscher is one of the best known men in the west. Nearly twenty years ago he was actively connected with the Omaha press and since that time the works of his pen have brought him an enviable reputation and hosts of admirers. Tickets for his lecture are now on sale. All who attend will be delightfully entertained.

People's Theatre.

Last night the Western Theatre company opened a week's engagement in "A Mountain Pink." At 8 o'clock every seat in the house was filled, and over one hundred people were turned away. The company is the strongest that has played in this house this season. To-night they present "The Octoroon," and continue through the week with a change of bill each night.

The Gas Well.

The capitalists who have formed a company for the purpose of sinking a well for gas or oil on the city's property near the river are having trouble with the squatters who occupy the lots which have been deeded to the company by the city for the purpose named. The squatters refuse to vacate the lots and will probably have to be ejected by legal measures.

Plaining Mill Fire.

An alarm announcing the outbreak of a fire in Moyer's Plaining mill, situated in the alley between Ninth and Tenth and Douglas and Dodge streets, was turned in at 1 o'clock this morning from box 43. Hose companies 1, 2 and 3 responded promptly, and in a short time the blaze was extinguished. The loss is estimated at between $200 and $400.

Impersonating an Officer.

For a week or more a fellow has been hanging around the saloons and dives of the city sponging drinks and meals, representing himself to be Officer Ormsbo. He was arrested last night and gave the name of Horace Venker. He carried a police club, knucks and a full supply of the indlements of war.

After Three Years.

George Marguard is a business man of Kansas City. Three years ago his room was burglarized and about $300 stolen from his trunk by a fellow named Schreck. Last evening Mr. Marguard was in a Tenth street saloon and recognized him by an India ink mark on his right hand. Schreck was arrested by Officer Haze.

Horses Wanted.

I will winter a few horses at my farm in McCardle precinct during the coming winter, which will be cared for as parties wish. Prices reasonable. For further information write to H. W. CROSSAR, Box 717, Omaha.

Caught Them in the Act.

Officer Ormsby did a neat piece of work last night in capturing two crooks in the act of turning a trick upon a saloon man. He overheard them say they were going to make the rounds and do up some one, and, concealing his star and brass buttons, followed them. The fellows made several attempts to catch some fellows, and finally borrowed $10 from Charles Neiber to show him a trick and then pocketed it. At this juncture the officer interfered and arrested the two fellows. They gave their names as Howell and Brooks.

After Lincoln.

Deputy Sheriff Grebe has gone to Chicago, armed with requisition papers, for the return of Chas. Lincoln, who is wanted here to answer to the charge of stealing a horse from Mrs. Bechtele, near Fort Omaha, and another from a farmer near Elkhorn. Lincoln was captured in Chicago last week.

Burglars.

The enterprising burglar went through the American house, at the corner of Tenth and Douglas, last night, securing $55 in cash and $15 worth of cigars from the bar. Entrance was effected by prying a door from its hinges.

People's Theatre.

To-night the Western Theatre company in "The Octoroon." Change of bill each night. Popular prices, 15, 25 and 35c. Matinee Saturday at 2:30 p. m.

A ROMANTIC STORY.

The Suddenly-Changed Fortunes of a Young Australian.

Truth is at all times stranger than fiction. A few days ago there sailed for England a young man whose career would furnish materials enough to construct a romance out of it. His father was a younger son of good family, and related collaterally to a baronet of old descent, living on a valuable estate in one of the midland counties. He was somewhat wild in his youth, and a clever amateur actor. A junior clerkship was procured for him in the treasury, and he used to spend as many of his evenings as he could in one or other of the theatres, where he fell in love and married a pretty ballet girl whose father was the stage doorkeeper and whose mother was the wardrobe woman in the theatre from which the husband took her. The union gave great offense to his friends, who found very little difficulty in prevailing upon him to quit England and go to Australia, accompanied by his wife, and furnished with the sum of £500 over and above their passage money. During the voyage a son was born to them, and a serious disaster befell the child's father. He accidently fell into the hold and injured his spine so severely that he was bedridden from that time forth. He lingered for a twelve-month after his landing and then died. His protracted illness had exhausted his resources and his young widow found herself worse than penniless—somewhat in debt after paying the funeral expenses. But she was a brave little woman, and soon obtained an engagement at the Theatre Royal, under her maiden name, and was enabled to maintain and give a tolerable education to her boy. She died of cancer before he was seventeen, and his life since then—which was about five years ago—has been one of vicissitude. Latterly he he has been acting as a waiter at one of our restaurants, where a certain inherited elegance of manner and refinement of accent on his part have often caused me to speculate as to his history. By chance I had the opportunity of rendering him a trifling service, which encouraged his confidence, and he told me his personal history. A few months ago, glancing down the advertising columns of the Times, I noticed one inquiring for a missing heir, and the particulars given seemed to tally with those of his own narrative. I called his attention to it, and the result was the opening up of a correspondence with a firm of solicitors in Lincoln's Inn Fields, followed in due time by a remittance from them and the information that he had succeeded to a baronetcy and £12,000 a year. No less than three lives stood between him and it when the old possessor of the title died, but these had all been removed by accident in the short space of eighteen months. One had been drowned while bathing near Mount Orgneil, in Jersey; a second had slipped into a crevasse upon the Alps; and a third had broken his neck while riding to hounds in his own country.—Sidney Mail.

Cure of Liver Complaint.

IOWA FALLS, Hardin Co., Ia., June 8, '85.
I have been using Allcock's Porous Plasters for four years, and I think I could not get along without them. For a long time I was afflicted with a pain under my right shoulder blade; I also had considerable difficulty in breathing. I applied an Allcock's Porous Plaster on my back, and one on my chest. I kept changing them every four days, and at the end of three weeks was entirely cured. E. S. STEVENS.

On the eastern coast of the Caspian sea a curious change is in progress. The Kara Bobhaz is an estuary nearly separated from the main body of the sea by a bank through which there is an inlet. The evaporation from this gulf is so great that a current continually sets in from the Caspian, and as there is no return current, the gulf becomes more and more saliferous, and a deposit of salt is in course of formation. In time this gulf will be cut off from the Caspian, and will then be dried up and become an extensive salt bed.

The wild man is coming to the front this fall. A Maine newspaper of repute says that one ten feet high was recently killed 100 miles north of Moosehead lake. He had previously killed one of three hunters, and the other two got re-enforcements and slew the giant, who was covered with long, brown hair. There also comes from Topeka, Kan., an account of the capture of a wild family, consisting of a man and woman and two children. They also had much hair on their faces and bodies, and the account says that on the top of the heads of the man and woman were evidences that they had been scalped. The theory advanced is that they were captured and scalped by Indians, and then escaped and became insane.

WHITE WOMEN IN AFRICA.

European Ladies Who are Pushing Into the Depths of the Dark Continent.

Quite a number of white men who are now in Central Africa have followed the advice of the celebrated explorer, Dr. Barth, who many years ago expressed the opinion that the traveler in Africa should take his wife with him. He said the natives did not understand how a man could live without a partner, and that they would hold him in greater respect if he was accompanied by his wife. Dr. Barth added that the people he met south of the Sahara had nothing against him except that he was a bachelor.

Dr. Livingstone's wife shared the privations and dangers of some of his travels, and it was while they were making a long journey together that she died and was buried on the banks of the Zambesi. It is only recently, however, that white women have begun to accompany their husbands into the depths of Central Africa.

If the young wife of Dr. Holub, the Austrian traveler, survives their great undertaking she will have made a longer journey in Africa than most explorers. Nearly two years ago this brave young couple started from South Africa, intending to explore the upper Zambesi and Congo valleys, and to go home, if possible, by way of the great lakes and the Nile. After Dr. Holub returned to Austria, a few years ago, having earned a place in the first rank of African travelers by his seven years of work in the Zambesi region, he married the attractive and gifted young lady who is now wandering with him among savage tribes. The entreaties of her friends could not turn her from her purpose to accompany her husband in his new explorations. About $30,000 was raised to buy their equipment, and when last heard from, two months ago, they and their band of porters were plunging into almost wholly unknown regions of the upper Zambesi. Mrs. Holub was in excellent health, but her husband had suffered to some extent from fever.

Last spring Lieutenant Valche returned to Europe for a vacation, after serving for three years on the upper Congo. Soon after his return he married a fair Belgian, and two months ago he and his bride started for the Congo, where he has re-enlisted in the services of the Free States. At last accounts they were at Stanley Pool in good health, and were about to start for Stanley Falls, 1,200 miles from the sea, where they will reside.

One of the most extensive travelers on the Congo is the wife of the missionary Grenfell, who, with her child, accompanied Mr. Grenfell, on some of his long journeys, during which he pushed his little steamer over 3,000 miles of the navigable waters of the Congo and its affluents.

On an island in Lake Tanganyika, not far from Ujiji, where Stanley found Livingstone sick and almost destitute, live Mr. and Mrs. Hore, who are among the pioneer missionaries of the lake region. The unhealthfulness of the mainland has driven them to this island, where Lieutenant Gleerup, on his trip across the continent this year, enjoyed the hospitalities of a white lady in Central Africa.

A carpenter named Burgslag, who is stationed at Lulaburg, far up the Kassai affluent of the Congo, where he has very successfully opened a plantation on which he has raised big crops of rice, corn, sugar cane, manoc, and European vegetables, has expressed the wish, at the end of his term of service, to bring his wife and children, now in Germany, to Lulaburg, and devote himself to his plantation and cattle raising. Two other employees of the Congo state, Von der Felson, the captain of one of the steamers, and Schneider, a gunmaker, whose terms of office have expired, have petitioned the government for permission to settle on the Sanfurn river to open plantations and raise cattle. Dr. Wolf, to whom their petition was referred, has advised that it be granted, and has expressed the opinion that, within certain limits, selected emigrants from Europe may safely be allowed and even encouraged to settle in the same region.

Dynamite has been used for driving piles in Pesth. A cast-iron plate is put on top of the pile and a charge of 17½ ounces of dynamite exploded on it. The effect is equal to five blows of a pile engine having a weight of 14½ Vienna cwt. and a stroke of 10 feet.

Beware of Scrofula

Scrofula is probably more general than any other disease. It is insidious in character, and manifests itself in running sores, pustular eruptions, boils, swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, etc. Hood's Sarsaparilla expels all trace of scrofula from the blood, leaving it pure, enriched, and healthy.

"I was severely afflicted with scrofula, and over a year had two running sores on my neck. Took five bottles Hood's Sarsaparilla, and am cured." C. E. LOVEJOY, Lowell, Mass.

C. A. Arnold, Arnold, Me., had scrofulous sores for seven years, spring and fall. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured him.

Salt Rheum

Is one of the most disagreeable diseases caused by impure blood. It is readily cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier.

William Spies, Elyria, O., suffered greatly from erysipelas and salt rheum, caused by handling tobacco. At times his hands would crack open and bleed. He tried various preparations without aid; finally took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and now says: "I am entirely well."

"My son had salt rheum on his hands and on the calves of his legs. He took Hood's Sarsaparilla and is entirely cured." J. B. Stanton, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.
