

THE WHEELS AGAIN TURN.

Lincoln Once More in Communication By Rail With the Outside World.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

Papers Filed at the Capitol by Three Organizations—Husband and Wife Sent to the Penitentiary—Court Notes.

(FROM THE BEE'S LINCOLN BUREAU.)

The B. & M. road resumed business yesterday, the main line east of Lincoln through continuous work being kept open nearly all the time during the storm, and large forces of men were sent out in every direction early yesterday morning.

Superintendent McCall came in from Wyome late yesterday, as expected, having his road clear last night at least. Trains began moving on all branches of the B. & M. system yesterday except the Atchison & Nebraska branch to Columbus, the announcement being made in regard to this line that regular trains for the day were abandoned.

The Nebraska City was also completely closed up to 3 p. m., but with prospects that it would be opened during the evening. On the Union Pacific road at noon communication was open north of Lincoln to Valparaiso and south from Lincoln to Beatrice. Regular trains were announced to leave on schedule time in the evening, although the line to Omaha was not to a certainty cleared at that time.

The moderate weather of the day aided in the speedy cleaning up of traffic.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION. The Bronson Marble Finishing company have been filed with the secretary of state. The articles locate the place of business of the corporation at Wyome, Garce county. The business of the corporation is that of introducing, manufacturing, selling royalties or territories of a certain compounded preparation for the smooth finish of plastering known as Bronson's marble finish.

The Tamora State Bank, of the town of Tamora, Seward county, has filed its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, the corporate limit of the bank being from November 1, 1886, to November 1, 1906. The articles recite the business to be transacted. The paid up capital stock of the bank is $20,000, divided into shares of $100 each, the limit of the capital stock of the bank at $30,000.

No. 93, of Omaha, has filed its articles of incorporation at the state house, the object of the incorporation being to secure the elevation of the financial, moral and intellectual welfare of its members by furnishing employment, pecuniary aid in case of sickness or disability, and money for traveling expenses, by defending members in legal difficulties, using all honorable means to effect a national reformation by legislation, and to secure the prohibition of child labor, the establishment of a normal day's labor, the abolition of tenement labor, and so on to the end of a long chapter. The articles are signed by the officers of the union.

Nothing but speculative merit can account for the phenomenal reputation achieved by Salvation Oil. It kills pain. Price 25 cents. The Darwinian theory perplexes the multitude. They object to descendants from monkeys, but not even a baby object to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

A Negro Family Turning White. Chicago News. In a clinical lecture at the college of physicians and surgeons last evening Dr. Henry J. Reynolds called attention to the peculiar case of a colored boy in the city whose skin is gradually becoming white, and whose hair, the doctor said, but this case was especially peculiar in that, while the father and mother of the boy were both negroes, the mother and six of the twelve children were also spotted, the other five children had white hair over a part of his scalp, while the other five were all black. The changes in all of the spotted members of the family began when the boy was still young. The disease which causes this change was known as vitiligo, and was probably due to an impaired function of the nerves that preside over the nutrition of the skin, which produced an imperfect supply or distribution of the pigment or coloring matter of the skin. The family are all otherwise healthy.

A Boston Merchant of Other Days. Dry Goods Chronicle: Nathaniel Ripley Cobb, of Boston, one of those noble merchants of the earlier days, was generous-hearted, and conscientious in the highest degree. In fact, he was so benevolent that in November, 1821, he drew up the following remarkable document: By the grace of God I will never be worth more than the value of the goods which I will give one-fourth of the net profits of my business to charitable and religious uses. If my net profits are less than $100,000 I will give three-fourths, and the whole after my fifteen thousand. No help me get me a mortgage of $100,000. N. R. Cobb, November, 1821.

Halford Sauce is invaluable for soup etc. Real Estate Transfers. The following transfers were filed Nov. 17, with the county clerk, and are subject to a lien in favor of the plaintiff, and being under cross-examination by defendant's counsel, and having stated in reply to a question put by counsel, that he went to board with B. Shook after the execution of the mortgage. Held, error on the part of the court to refuse to allow B. to state in reply to a question put by plaintiff's counsel, how he came to go to the home of B. to board.

There being no evidence before the court that any witness had sworn falsely, but the main witness for the plaintiff being his final dismissal as such witness, having no recollection of what he saw and retraction of a part of his testimony: Held, error on the part of the court to give in charge to the jury the maxim, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

NEW BIOGRAPHY OF LINCOLN.

Sketches of the Biographers and Gossip About Their Habits of Work.

RESULT OF 16 YEARS LABOR.

Interesting Things About Lincoln and His Relations With Private Secretaries.

I called upon Colonel John Hay to-day—writes Frank George Carpenter, the Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader—and had a chat with him about the biography of Abraham Lincoln, which he and Mr. John G. Nicolay are writing, and the first chapters of which are published in this month's Century Magazine. The publication of this biography is looked upon here as the literary event of the year. The close relations of the biographers to the martyred president during the most eventful parts of his life, their high standing as literary men, the facilities they have had for the preparation of the work, and the sixteen and more years during which they have almost been constantly engaged upon it, lead to the general belief that it will be the authentic and lasting history of the times of which it treats and the standard biography of the great and loved president who is its hero.

The biographers, Colonel John Hay and Mr. John G. Nicolay, are two of the most interesting characters of the present age. Both are in the prime of life, Nicolay being a little over fifty, and Hay five or six years younger. Both have had long public careers, and the lives of both have run strangely close together. Colonel Hay tells me he met Nicolay when he was a schoolboy, and when Nicolay was still under age. It was in Prussia, Pilsen county, Ill. Nicolay, who is of German descent, had come to this country with his parents to Cincinnati, had attended the schools there, and was now beginning life in Illinois as a printer and editor. At the age of eighteen he had resolved to become a printer, and had entered the printing office. He advanced so fast that in one year he was associate editor, and at the end of two years was editor and proprietor. It was such that Hay remembers him. Shortly after this young Hay attended school at Springfield, where his father, Milton Hay, was a leading lawyer. Here he first saw Lincoln, who was then twelve, had conceived a great admiration for him. His family and Abraham Lincoln attended the same church, and he can remember having played truant time and time again in order that he might attend campaign meetings where Lincoln was to speak. While he was still at Springfield Nicolay came to the city, a child with his parents to Cincinnati, had attended the schools there, and was now beginning life in Illinois as a printer and editor. At the age of eighteen he had resolved to become a printer, and had entered the printing office. He advanced so fast that in one year he was associate editor, and at the end of two years was editor and proprietor. It was such that Hay remembers him. Shortly after this young Hay attended school at Springfield, where his father, Milton Hay, was a leading lawyer. Here he first saw Lincoln, who was then twelve, had conceived a great admiration for him. His family and Abraham Lincoln attended the same church, and he can remember having played truant time and time again in order that he might attend campaign meetings where Lincoln was to speak.

This was at the time when Lincoln and Douglas were the great rivals of the nation, and one of Hay's strongest impressions of Lincoln was received shortly after he began his law studies. Lincoln came into the office with a magazine in his hand. It contained an article signed A. Douglas on "Popular Sovereignty." He gestured with the magazine as he spoke, and said to Hay's uncle, "Milt, Hay, this will never be a great success, it is a matter of indifference morally whether slavery is voted up or voted down. I tell you it will never do."

During Lincoln's presidential campaign, Nicolay helped him with his correspondence, and after the election Lincoln appointed him his private secretary and took him to Washington. At this time he had just been admitted to the bar, and he went along to see the inauguration. He had no thought of any office, but during the few days he stopped in Washington Nicolay found in the president's work in the then busy times of 1861, was more than one man could do. President Lincoln asked Hay to assist Nicolay, and he thus became assistant private secretary, and remained in the White House during the whole of Lincoln's administration, with the exception of a few months when he served in the army as an adjutant general under General Hunter and Gilmore. Hay was with President Lincoln at his death, and after that he and Nicolay entered the diplomatic service, both were stationed at Paris, Nicolay as consul general and Hay as secretary of legation. During their stay abroad their relations were very close, and when they returned they edited for a short time the Chicago Tribune together. After this they worked together at Washington, Colonel Hay as assistant secretary of state and Mr. Nicolay as marshal of the supreme court.

During the years since then their relations have been, if anything, closer than ever. Colonel Hay spends much of his time at Washington, and he does not often to Cleveland. They own together a romantic country home in the Rocky Mountains called "Crystal Park." Nicolay spent some time there with his daughter during the past year. His wife, a lady, who has a remarkable talent for painting, has brought back some beautiful sketches in oil of Rocky Mountain scenery. Both Hay and Nicolay are married. Nicolay owns a very comfortable home on Capitol Hill. He gets a good salary as marshal of the supreme court, is a thrifty, go-ahead fellow, and has made some very good investments. He is a millionaire, and he has a magnificent home here and in Cleveland. His Washington home is perhaps one of the finest in the United States, and is just across from the white house and in the very centre of social, political and historical Washington. The ground upon which it is built cost $6 a foot, and the noted architect, Richard Henry Hunt, one of his best works. It is very richly furnished, and Colonel Hay's library has windows looking out upon Lafayette park, the treasury, the white house, and the state, war and navy departments. This library is, I judge, about twenty feet wide by forty feet long. It is finished in old English oak, with a wainscoting of books, and a ceiling of a wall of magnolia leaves in low relief, painted by Cotter, of New York. Its ceiling is paneled in oak. Great beams cross each other at right angles, and in the center of each ceiling is a disk of oak, the grain of which shows through the gold leaf with which it is covered. This library has many cosy nooks and corners, and an one of the loveliest of the easy seats, over which are canopies of oak. It has also a big fireplace, with its walls are hung with beautiful pictures, and some pretty curio cases. Over the mantel is a Madonna by Sassoferrato in a gold frame of Florentine oak, beautifully carved, and on one of the shelves of the library lies a death mask of Abraham Lincoln. On another shelf is a bronze medalion of W. D. Howells about twelve by fourteen inches in size and of a striking likeness. It was made by Lattin Meade in Florence about 1870. Then there is a portrait of Henry James by Lattin Meade, which is very fine. It presents the novelist as a young man and shows quite a contrast to his photographs of to-day. Upon Colonel Meade's desk, a Chinese incense burner as big as a trivet, and the desk itself is a large flat one of oak with a curious bent wood chair such as Barrett uses in his playing of Hamlet. All of the surroundings are of old English taste and luxury, rather than those of hard work and arduous investigation.

This fine library, however, is not Colonel Hay's only one, and where he does his writing, and where he works every morning from half-past 8 o'clock till 12, is in the top of the house, and it is very plainly furnished. Its finish is of a terra cotta, which is washed, and its windows give fine views of the greater part of Washington. Two low cases of shelves, a couple of tables, and a chair or two make up its furniture, and the shelves are books relating solely to the work upon which he is engaged. They are histories of the war, a copy of the reports of the army, of Lincoln, and other books of the character of Colonel Hay tells me that he and Major Nicolay have bought and read over twelve hundred volumes in their preparation of this work. They have also read thousands of others, and they have had access to all of the private papers of President Lincoln as well as to those of many of the noted men of this country. Said he: "I formed the idea of writing this history while we were in the White House in 1863, and we commenced making notes then. During the last two years of our stay there the idea was constantly in our minds and we were continually preparing for it. We took down conversations and incidents on the day of their occurrence. I kept a diary, and I kept a diary of the incidents of our lives which are filled with the notes of this time. Nicolay made a great quantity of memoranda. We took down everything we thought important, and in the writing of the history we did not need to consult our memories in a single instance. The great flood of reminiscence which is sweeping over the country has shown how unimportant the idea was, and how constantly in our minds and we were continually preparing for it.
