A Farewell Feast. Saturday evening a number of friends of Mr. W. H. Wakefield tendered a supper to that gentleman as a farewell token of friendship, at the Ogden house. The affair was quietly gotten up and was in-

The menu was very neat and in the shape of a folder. On the outside was "A Token of Friendship," white inside was the following MENU:

A Few Talk of Kicking.

The tax sale begins to-day, and there is no little amount of street discussion as to what action certain property owners will take. The sale includes not only the usual taxes, but also for such special assessments as arise from grading, sewering and paving. Under the arrangement made by the city the property owners are given time to pay these special assessments, there being a certain amount due now and other payments being defeared and payable in future years. In order to accomplish this the city has issued bonds based on the fund to be created by this annual collection of such assessments from the property owners. It is reported that a few of the property owners are taking steps to get injunetions to restrain the treasurer from selling their property for delinquent taxes of this sort. This report has caused much indignant talk, and if any are foolhardy enough to attempt this, they will not find their standing in this community materially bettered by such a course.

It is the right of every citizen to seek his rights in court, but when he seeks simply to evade an honest obligation on the ground of some supposed defect or technical mistake, it certainly does not raise the man to any high pinneals. raise the man to any high pinnacle. Especially is this the case when the city as a whole lends its credit to help the individual property owner, and for his accommodation, so that instead of having to pay for his pavement in one hard lift, he is allowed to pay for it in easy installments and on long time.

Such a course strikes the average citizen as a base ingratitude to the city at large, and hence there is much indigna-tion that any should even talk of putting the city to any such trouble.

It has been suggested, and with much force, that in future arrangements for the improvement of streets, the city protect tseif against annovances and threats of this kind by making contracts with those property owners who desire to take advantage of the city's credit to get time in which to pay these special assessments. It is proposed that property owners desiring to have a term of years in which to pay should sign an agreement not to commence any suits or claim any covarion on account of any technical flaw evasion on account of any technical flaw in the proceedings. Such as do not care to enter into such an agreement can have the privilege of paying for the entire amount of their paying in cash on the completion of the work. Such agree-ments are made in other cities, and most of these kickers are quite ready to agree to submit to paying their just assess-ments as they fall due, rather than have ments as they fall due, rather than have to pay the whole amount at once. There needs to be some iron grasp by which to handle these men. The talk of injunctions is particularly baneful and annoying to enterprising citizens at this particular time, when the city is just entering upon its biggest boom. It is a bad time for kickers to begin to cause trouble and they will find themselves in a sad minority, and be without sympathy from the mass of the people. the mass of the people.

Heating stoves at cost to close them out. W. A. Wood, No. 504 Main street.

Like Unto the Mountains. Yesterday morning services were resumed in the new St. Paul's Episcopal church, the rector, Rev. T. J. Mackey, officiating. The new heating apparatus seemed to work perfectly, as the church was very comfortable throughout. There was a goodly sized congregation and a most excellent sermon was preached. He chose as his text the words of the psalmist: "Thy Righteousness is Like the Mountains." He pictured vividly the feelings of the holy poet as he considered the weaknesses and sins of man, and how he turned in relief to the righteousness of God, of which the grand mountains reminded him. The speaker proceeded to draw some very beautiful and helpful comparisons between the mountains and righteousness of God. He did not wonder that the heart grew sick some times as one looked out upon the world, with all its sinfulness. On every hand were devotees to fashion, victims of intemperance, and everywhere there was visible the unfaithfulness of man. It crept into the church, into the home life, as instanced by the recent telegraphic picturings of high life in England. Bribery was common even in high places. The christian worker could not but be at times discouraged. Then it was that he needed to look to the hills from which his salvation comes. He should look to the righteousness of God, which like the grand mountains was not to be moved. There was faithfulness, truth, stability,

The discouraged christian worker should turn from self to a contemplation of the righteousness of God. There was was comfort and strength. The incident was recalled of the reception in New York of the news of the assassination of Lincoln. While the surging and riotous crowd was beyond the control of the authorities, with all their physical powers, it remained for a single man to quiet them, to do what police could not do, and he did it nobly by recalling them to the fact that "God still reigns."

The mountains were not only places of strength, but also of protection. They protected from the inroads of enemies and the ravages of the storm. So God's righteousness should be looked to as a refuge and a resting place. God's mercy was greater than man's. The true christian, trusting in God, could there rest se-cure and be beyond the reach of the enemy and out of the power of the storm. The preacher urged these truths upon the attention of his hearers in well chosen words and with much earnestness.

Yesterday morning and afternoon were extremely pleasant for sleighing, and many persons, who, on account of the extremely cold weather, since the recent snow had been unable to be out, took advantage of the temporary mild speil and were out in their cutters with their merry jingling bells. Everybody who owned i sleigh, or who have bobs attached to their buggies were out enloying a slegh-ride. The hills were lined with coasters of

A Runaway. While Mr. Peterson, of the Denmark house, was out riding with his family yesterday, the horse became frightened on Seventh street and in the run they were thrown out. Mrs. Peterson was thrown against a telegraph pole and badly injured. Her collar bone was broken, and she received some severe bruises and cuts. Dr. Bellinger attended her.

Gladstone's Money Matters. Liverpool Post: A correspondent of a tory organ does not pay Mr. Gladstone a bad compliment for his refusal to accept the pension to which he has been entitled for the past eleven years. This rather curnundgeonist individual points out that Mr. Gladstone is rated in the Domesday Book at £14,000 a year, and repeats the once very popular report that he had £800,000 invested in shares in the underground railway. I believe this report is £800,000 invested in shares in the underground railway. I believe this report is entirely unfounded, and that Mr. Gladstone, instead of being precluded by his wealth from seeking a pension, rather might claim it on much better grounds than Mr. Disraeli could urge when he obtained one. Mr. Disraeli had £7,000 a year income through his wife. It is true that he was terribly embarrassed when he married. It has even been said that there were writs out against him to the amount of £40,000. If he had not made his lucky marriage there is no doubt amount of £40,000. If he had not made his lucky marriage there is no doubt that he would have been ruined. Mrs. Wyndham Lewis was the wife of Mr. Disraeli's colleague in the representation of Maidstone, and it was understood that Mr. Lewis would pay Mr. Disraeli's debts in consideration of the services the brilliant young fellow had done him in the election. But Mr. Lewis died suddenly, and there was no mention of Mr. Disraeli and there was no mention of Mr. Disrael in the will. Some time after Mrs. Lewis was informed of the desperate state of Mr. Disraeli's affairs, and knowing the wishes of her dead husband, she at once consulted her lawyer as to whether she could not pay the debts and present Mr. Disraili with £40,000. Her man of business, who was a man of sentiment and discrimination, knew probably how the wind was blowing, and made the gallant answer that she ought to present the money to Disraeli in her hands, and so she was married. Disraeli, however, was not released from his embarrassments by forty, or, as he himself said, "near fifty thousand pounds;" and when he had this splendid fortune and was in perfectly easy circumstances he made no offer to give up the two thousand a year which the treasury allows to statesmen of exigent means, Mr. Gladstone, I have heard from a very good source, is, for a man in his position, quite poor. The fall in the value of land has greatly reduced the amount of his nominal $70,000 a year, and he himself, if I remember rightly, stated publicly a few years ago that the great change in the agrarian system in England had made him anxious for the future of his for the future of his own family.
