THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT.

Dr. Knapp, of York, Appointed to Succeed Matthewson at the Insane Asylum.

THE REQUIRED BOND FILED.

Annual Report of the State Librarian -Coming Convention of State Dairymen-A New Insurance Company-Notes.

TEROM THE BRE'S LINCOLN BURBAR.

In the silent watches of Wednesday night Governor Dawes took the final step in the Matthewson removal question and commissioned Dr. William Knapp, of York, as superintendent. At 9 o'clock vesterday morning the doctor presented s official bond to the deputy secretary of state and in company with the governor proceeded to the asylum to take formal charge. The bond of Dr. Knapp is in amount $10,000, and the bondsmen to this are Judge O. P. Mason, J. H. Harley and Dr. J. O. Carter, This extra whirl in the proceedings of the last few days will cause the attorneys of Dr. Matthewson to make erasures and write new names in their pleadings if they are filed in quo warranto, which as yet seems to be unsettled. It is known now that when the rumor of a day ago was affoat that Secretary Roggen and members of the board were to be arrested that the attorney general put in a half day's solid work drawing up complaints holding them ready if arrests commenced to serve on the part of the state on those interested in the arrests first named. Dr. Knapp, the appointee to the institution, seems to be a wellknown physician who has not been unacquainted with state politics in the past. and who was a candidate for governor this present autumn. As a physician he is favorably known in his locality and has been the B. & M. physician for York and immediate vicinity. Since his appointment prominent politicians state that the appointment is the choice of General Thaver in the matter, that the question of a successor to Matthewson had its corner in the late state convention and that at that time Governor Dawes had Dr. Mansfield, of Ashland, in view, but through well-known political influence, in which Jim Laird played a part, deferred his choice and that Dr. Knapp was agreed upon when a change should be made. The "I told you so" politician in this way can always tell how it was going to happen after a change is brought about. Guy A. Brown, state librarian, has pre-pared his report for the past two years and turned it over to the governor. This report shows that there were at the time of the last report 23,308 volumes in the library; that there has been added to this number by exchange and purchase 3,601 volumes and 6,000 copies of the Nebraska court reports, making a total of 32,999 volumes. There have been disbursed, however, through sales 5,345 copies of the reports, which leaves a net number of volumes in the state library at the time of this report of 27,379. The receipts in eash since the time of the last report amount to $3,076.54, and the expenditures during length of time have $3,019.68. When the central part of the capitol building is completed the second and third stories of the building will be used for the state library and the supreme court rooms, and the additional room will be ready none too soon to accommodate the librarian. It will be necessary to provide during the next session of the legislature for the furniture and fixtures, shelvings and the like in the new quarters, and the librarian recommends that $10,000 be appropriated for the library, and $5,000 for the court room.

DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION. The second annual convention of the Nebraska Dairymens' association will be held at Sutton during the days and even ings of December 14, 15 and 16, and the committee in charge announce that it will round up with a grand banquet in the opera house at that place. The dairy interests of Nebraska are yet in their infancy, but they are growing. The first convention of dairymen held at Fremont a year ago, developed that fact and the ans laid for the coming session show relusively that the association exa great gathering of farmers dairymen, and in fact all are interested in the growth of dairy rests and the increase of good, clean or made in the state and for home umption. The programme for this vention announces a number of spefeatures, and also announces the poseattendance of some of the great rymen of the state. Prominent among e will be Colonel W. D. Hoard, ed-of Hoard's Dairyman, T. D. Curtis, Chicago, Mr. Gabrilson, of Iowa, ex-evernor Furnas and a host of others Om this state. To accommodate those tending this convention the railways have made a reduction of rates, parties going for one fare and returning at one-third that rate. The sessions of the conrention will be free. Ample room it is amounced will be provided for the exhibition of all dairy and creamery products, machinery and supplies, and the dealers in such are invited to be present. The programme for the convention by days is as follows:

MELANCHOLY AND MORPHINE.

The facts of another attempt at suicide came to light yesterday, the suicidal party being a woman named Lilian Enifer, who had rooms over the Bee Hive store and who was found by the proprie fined him $10 and costs for being drunk and disorderly. Two other cases of drunkenness were disposed of and the trial of the brakeman, Willis, for assault was set for a hearing at 3 p. m. yesterday, providing the main witnesses in the case had time to arrive in the city to prosecute. Several arrests were made yesterday, mostly the usual cases of becoming helpicssly drunk on the streets, and their stories will be related to-day.

Bassett, Gibnon, discus-About two and a half years since there arrived in the city of San Luis Obispo, a stranger, whose appearance indicated a severe and prolonged struggle with the fickle goddess, says the San Francisco Examiner. Out of a shock of matted hair peered two eyes of remarkable sharpness, and a face of wonderful shrewdness. formed a rare picture for the frame work of tawny locks. His peculiar appearance and outre costume created considerable comment among those who observed him, and many were the surmises as to his previous condition of servitude and present intentions.

He remained in the vicinity of the city for several days, and then took up his residence at Avila, a small hamlet on the seashore, some nine miles from San Luis Obispo.

While here the major portion of his time was spent in the examination of the old charts of the coast line from Point Conception northward. These docu-ments were kept in a strong leathern pouch, which he guarded with the utmost vigilance. One day he appeared at a neighboring lumber yard and purchased sufficient material for the construction of a small skiff. This, he informed the curious, was for the purpose of enabling him to engage in the occupa-tion of a fisherman. The diminutive tion of a tisherman. craft was soon completed, but instead of embarking in his proposed avocation, he spent the hours of daylight in exploring the small bays and indentations of the

On being asked the motives for these explorations he was more than usually reticent. At length he gratified the curiosity of his inquisitors by informing them that he was in search of a conve-nient spot suitable for the location of a nish-drying establishment. This explanation was accepted by many, but the knowing ones regarded it as merely a subterfuge. At length the regular disappearance of the stranger in one certain direction convinced the observant that the desired location had at least been se

One morning he unmoored his skiff as usual and departed for the seene of his labors. For several days he was not seen in any of his old haunts, and those who had watched his regular departure and return grew alarmed and determined to organize an expedition to inquire into his prolonged absence. One of the residents of Avilla, however, asserted that he had seen the stranger beach his boat regularly every evening several miles below the accustomed landing place. It was also asserted by this gentleman that the stranger, upon landing, always disappeared in a neighboring canyon bearing upon his shoulders some apparently heavy substance concealed in a sack.

This information, while it relieved the apprehension regarding the safety of the trainp, aroused the curiosity of many, who determined to at least pay a visit of inspection to the stranger's rendezvous. Preparations for the visit were nearly completed when the object of their solic tude made his reappearance among them. After expressing his obligations to the citizens of Avilla for their uniform kindness to him during his sojourn among them, the stranger expressed his determi nation to desert those scenes, amid which he assured them he had passed many pleasant hours. His boat he left as a souvenir, and atter a courteous farewell disappeared over the range Previous to his departure, however, he had bought a before. S. G. Springue was in the city yesterday on business for the Missouri Pacific. Dr. M. W. Walton, of Beatrice, he informed them, of departing from the country in a more genteel manner than he had entered it

On the day of his departure one of the residents at Avila was returning from San Luis and encountered the quondam tramp leading his burro, which appeared to be laden with some extremely heavy substance. The information rekindled the curiosity of the Avilanos and a party was organized for the purpose of exploring the coast line and discovering, if pos-sible, the late residence of their departed guest. They departed in a small boat and were soon engaged in closely scru-tinizing the inlets of the coast. At length the attention of one of the party was attracted by the appearance of numerous footprints in the sand near the base of an inaccessible cliff. He at once drew the attention of his companions to his discov ery, and they determined to disembark and follow up the clew. Upon nearing the cliff a small circular opening was observed about three feet from the ground. The footprints led di rectly to this opening and there were lost. From this it was, of course, ap parent that an entrance to the cavern-if one existed-was necessary to a solution of the mystery. Accordingly, a messen-ger was dispatched for the purpose of securing some method of illumination He soon returned and the party entered the aperture. A short passage opened into a lofty cavern about eighty feet in diameter. Its internal appearance was extremely forbidding, and it was impossi ble to conceive now any human being could have selected it as a place of abode. The floor was composed of sand and sea shells that had evidently been recently disturbed. In one corner of the caveri was discovered a cavity some three feet in depth, apparently excavated but a short time before. Among the debris were discovered several Spanish copper coins, none of which bore a date later than 1750. Near the cavity the frame work of a seaman's chest in the last stages of decay was found, and there was also picked up the mildewed pages of vessel's logbook. These discoveries, as may be imagined, excited the most intense curlosity of the explorers. In the midst of an animated discussion regarding the solution of the mystery, one of the party chanced to glance upward at the overhanging walls, and there, rudely sculptured in the basalt ociling, was the following:

tres varas al sut aqui. El barque Octubre 1 70

By a logical deduction from the cir cumstances connected with the discovery of the inscription those portions erased by the action of the elements may be supplied as follows:

Wrecked here in the month of October, 1770, the ship San Jose.

The surprise of the party was of course intensified by the discovery of this inscription, for it lent color to the assumption that treasure had been unearthened by the supposed tramp and carried off unde their very eyes. Further exploration dis-closed nothing of moment, and to this day the identity of the discoverer of the buried treasure has not been revealed. The possessor of the logbook, however, who is a resident of Oakland, has for some time past been endeavoring to translate its contents. But his unfamili-arity with maritime Spanish and the badly preserved condition of the document has proved a severe trial. After severe and continuous study, however, the fol-lowing pertinent facts have been evolved: On June 16, 1769, the brig San Jose, with materials for the establishment of the Alta California missions, under command of Jose de Galvez, set sail for port of Loretto, Lower California. sides the usual articles used for barter-ing purposes with the aborigines the vessel contained 10,000 Spanish doubloons and a large amount of silver. The log-book contained entries up to July 19, 1769, and at that date all records

FOUL PLAY IN NEW YORK.

Women in Rags Who Conduct Men To Almost Certain Death. New York Mail and Express: "What becomes of the people who are reported as missing?" and old detective was asked by a Mail and Express reporter yester-day at police headquarters.

Well, that is a hard question to answer. Some leave the country to escape their families, and others are killed in dives about the city."

"Do many return after several years?

"Yes, I have known cases where peo-ple have been missing for twenty years, where their wives have married again, and they have returned to surprise, much more than delight, those who at first mourned their loss. How some people disappear was explained to me several years ago in a case which never became public. A young man, who was studypublic. A young man, who was study-ing for the clergy, was standing one night in front of Wallack's theatre, waiting for the time when the performance should begin, when a young girl, shiver ing in a thin dress and a shawl, which scarcely covered her shoulders, touched on the arm and begged him for God's sake to give her some money, as her mother was starving, and she had no means by which to obtain food for her. The gentleman told the girl that it was against a rule he had made ever to give money on the street. The girl looked at him with a pitiful expression, and begged him, if he did not believe her story, to come to the house where she lived, which was not far away, and see for himself if the story she had told him of the starvation and want of her family was not true. Touched by the girl's pathetic look the young man decided to follow her. She took him around the corner of Thirteenth street, nearly to Avenue A, to a house with no blinds on the windows, with shutters tumbling from their fastenings, and with a battered front door. She took him up one flight of stars to a room which was utterly bare of furniture, except one broken down bed, which stood in a coruer. On a mantelpiece sputtered a tallow candle, which only gave light enough to show the deep darkness of the

"She told him she would go into the next room and tell her mother that a kind stranger had come to see her. While she was going she asked him to sit on the bed, which was the only seat she had to offer. The young man horrified at such poverty, and never thinking of any evil results to himself seated himself on the edge of the bed. Scarcely had he done so when two arms reached out from under it and seized him by the legs. With all his force he could not keep himself from being dragged under. He threw himself back and attempted to grasp the edge of the bed, but in the position in which he was he could do nothing. Slowly but surely he felt himself dragged downwards by the powerful arms. As his hand slipped from one hold in the bed to the other they happened to touch the heavy walking stick which he carried. As a last resort he seized the cane, and with all his strength he thrust it under the bed. The heavy iron ferule with which the end of the cane was loaded came in contact with something soft A horrible curse filled the room. desperate energy the young man again and again thrust the cane into the dark ness under the bed. Slowly the vice-like grip of the hands which held his legs relaxed. He made one final and desperat effort and found himself free. He rushed down stairs and from the house When he reached the corner thought that, dishevelled as was, it was impossible for him to go home. Seeing a policeman on the next block he went to him, and told him the experience he had had. The officer laughed at him and insinuated that he had better go home and take nothing more to drink. But when he found the young man was really in earnest, he called for help and returned to the house which the young man pointed out as the one in which he had been as saulted. When they knocked at the door it was opened by a man who had every appearance of just having been awakened from a sound sleep. The young man in sisted on going up stairs, and followed by the police he rushed up and into the room which he had lately left. In it there was nothing that he could recog-nize or identify. A carpet covered the floor, pictures were hanging on the walls, a piano stood in one corner, and everything looked as if it had been recently occupied by a woman of refined tastes change and tried to explain that he must have gotten into the wrong house. The police returned to their original theory that the young man had been drinking and again advised him to go home.

'There is no question in my mind that if the young man not been successful in breaking away from the grip of the man who held him from under the bed, another unknown body with nothing to identify it would have been found floating in the river, and would have been buried in Potter's field unknown and un cared for, while another one of the mys terious disappearances which so often thrill the New York public, would had its nine days' run of wonder and then have been forgotten. "Did you ever hear anything more of this case?'

"Yes. Only a few days ago the same young man who had told me of his experience of four years ago met me and I asked him if he had ever, while wander-ing through the streets of New York, seen anybody whom he could recognize as the poor-clad girl who had led him into the house. Once, he said, only i few weeks ago, while walking up Broad-way he had seen a girl beautifully dressed, and with every appearance of wealth about her, and he thought that an imperceptible change came over her face. With her was a man, handsome, dressed, but with a horribly scarred fore head. Deep grooves ran from the edge of his hat down into one eye, which was evidently a glass one. The couple passed him, and with them passed the last vestige of an incident which nearly cost the young man his life and the one of its ablest clergymen. I could re-call a dozen other instances," said the detective, "of men who have not been so lucky in escaping the traps that were laid for them. I have no doubt that the young Yate divinity student, whose body was found some three months ago float ing in the river, met his death in much the same way as the young man whose story I have told you, and the rough clothes in which he was found were put on him after his death. I know of : dozen other cases of people who hav-been caught in such traps in New York Come around again some time and I'll tell you about them."

IDEAL BROILING. Broiling can be done in the oven of the Charter Oak Range or Stove with Gauze Oven Door, more perfectly than over the live coals.

Lay the steak, chops, ham or fish on a wire broiler or meat rack, placing it in an ordinary bake pan to catch the drippings.

Allow it to remain in the oven with the door closed 15 or 20 minutes. No turning is required. At the end of this time it will be found nicely cooked ready to serve. THIS IS THE IDEAL WAY TO BROIL MEATS. There is no taint of coal-gas or smoke, and the meats are more tender and better in flavor than those broiled over the coals. The convenience or broiling in the oven will be appreciated by every house-keeper, and adds another to the many reasons why the Charter Oak Range or Stove with the Wire Gauze Oven Door should be preferred
