The state board of printing concluded their work and made their awards yesterday after an adjournment from the afternoon of the day before. This board is composed of Secretary Roggen, Auditor Babcock and Treasurer Williard, and they had previously advertised for the work, but when the hids were received they considered them all rather high and threw them out, asking for new bids at nrer. 10 o'clock yesterday. The pool, however, were equal for the occasion and the bid received yesterday upon which action was taken were duplicates of those thrown out and the awards were made covering the printing of the reports of the state officers. The board, in the matter of the letting of the contract for printing of the house rolls and senate files, adjourned action until the 5th of January in order to consult in this matter with the committees on print-ing for the two houses, and after instructing for the two houses, and after instructing the attorney general to draw contracts with the above bidders for the work as let, the board adjourned to meet on January 5 for completion of business. CHARMED AND CANED.

At a meeting of the Lancaster bar asso-

The bar meeting was called to express suitable resolutions on the retirement of Judge Hayward and District Attorney Strode from their labors in Lancaster county. L. W. Billingsly, Allen W. Field and W. H. Snelling were appointed a committee on resolutions and at 2 p.m. in adjourned session the following resolutions were presented and

Of the bonds sold $25,000 worth were sold at par, but the commis-sion for the sale of them was deducted, otherwise they netted par. The funds arising from this sale were turned over to the city treasurer. Fifty thousand dol-lars of the bonds were sold and a com-mission of 14 per cent for their sale was allowed. The funds arising from this sale were deposited in the different banks in the city, and deposited subject to call at any time, the banks paying 5 per cent interest for the time they hold the funds. An Easy-Going People-Routes of Transportation-An Important Enterprise,

The Potosi mint, writes a correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, was completed in 1754. It occupies a whole square. The windows are at an elevation of twelve feet from the ground and are all grated. There is only one entrance, and that is guarded by two pair of tremendous oaken doors well studded with iron. The walls are six feet thick and of solid stone. The interior is heavily arched. The timbers are of wonderful size, all 18 by 18 inches square, of the Pacific side there is a route from Got-One bracha wood. They are said to have tendo via Puno and Chililaya to La Paz Quebracha wood. They are said to have come from the Gran Chau, and each dragged in by 300 Indians. For one unacquainted with the roads of Bolivia it is impossible to appreciate the difficulties that had to be overcome. Formerly the machinery used was most primitive, but in 1869 a full set was imported from Philadelphia. The lower story of the mint is twenty-six feet high. Everything is on a large scale. The mint is now only running about a week in the month. the government not farnishing sufficient While I was at Potosi the people had their independence celebration. It was a quict affair. There was a parade by a poorly drilled battallion of infantry. The band however, was really good. The soldiers wore sandals and were armed with the old-style Peabody-Martini rifle In the evening there was a performance at the theater. The building was formeriy a church. It has many arches and a stone floor, the side aisles, being the city to arrange to pay such small bills a stone floor, the side aisles, being without having them go a begging at divided into two stories, make two rows of boxes. It was about as primitive a hall as I ever saw. The audience was democratic in the extreme. Some of the front boxes were filled with sofficers in full dress, including white kids. The ladies were modest-looking, but I failed to find a pretty face-certainly not a single including. Each result in single intellectual one. First we had the national hyper of Bouvia, played by the band and sung by the scholars of the college. I was told that they sung, for they were so frightened that you could not hear them.

DRAMATIC ART. After that there was a live-act Spanish tragedy. On each side of the stage two solutions were posted with muskets. For headgear they had grenadier shaped bats, only much higher. I was told after wards that this was the idea of the colonel's to add colat to the celebration. He had these hats prepared of oiled paper and a lighted candle rigged up in each to make a more brilliant effect. Unfortunately one of the candles fell over and burned half the hair off the poor wearer's head so the candles were put out. After the second act, on going out, I saw one of the sentries fast asleep on the ground with his musket between his legs. After the performance we went to the club, where I met the commander of the battriion. Of course I complimented him on the efficiency of his troops and asked him when the drill would be repeated, "Any day and hour you may wish," he replied. That staggered me, especially as my friend assured me that he meant it. There is a tower belonging to the ruins of the Jusuit church still standing which I consider one of the gens of art in that country. The fact of Personal Paragraphs.

Imports come mostly by the way of the Argentine Republic, some by the way of Autofogasta, and a little via Tacna. The trade of the town is almost entirely local, but it promise to grow once the new mining company gets into full operation. At present it employs about 400 men, nearly all Indians. They are paid at the rate of $1 in silver per day of twelve hours, but are kept in the mine twenty-four hours, receiving two days' pay, In some mines the miners are kept for thirty-six hours, laying off the same length of time This applies only to In-dians. White inbor is paid double and gives a better result, but is scarce. The want of intelligent labor is much felt.

A QUIET CITY. From Potosi to Sucre, a distance of twenty-nine leagues, I took the postroad. The town of Sucre can be seen quite a long distance off. As I was now travel ing from west to east, the road was al-ternately up and down-hill work, the chains of mountains running north and south. At the bottom of the last canyon I met many people, mostly Indians, returning from the capital with bundles, evidently of purchased goods. Most of the Quichoas had little guitars, they kept twanging while walking along. At this point the road widened and was well kept. Here I saw the first carriage I had seen for many days, it was a find four-in-hand barouche. To own a car-riage is a sign of wealth and gentility. Hence there are some forty owned in the place, although they are of little practi-cal value. The ladies of Sucre, when bread and water. they have to go three or four squares, call out their conches. This city is lo cated on a plateau 9,200 feet above the sea. Its climate is very even all the year round and is considered the healthiest in Bolivia. The inhabitants are the wealth lest in the country. Partly owing to the fine climate, and partly because it is cen traliy located for several leading mining and agricultural districts, lines of telegraph connect this place with both of said mines. Many residents of this place have been educated abroad, mostly in France, and the ladies dress most styl-ishly. I saw a number of grand planes here, but hardly a decent store. surrounding mountains, though not much higher than the location of the town, are sufficient to keep off heavy winds. TASY-GOING PROPLE. The mails go out once a week in all di-rections Before the mail closes an Indian makes the round of the place, tool ing a horn, which gives a sound like the Indian way cry—dismal, sharp and long drawn. This is a notice to the people to hurry up with their correspondence. This is a necessity, as in these countries to hurry is to be undignified. Nothing is done precipitately. Sucre is at present the capital, the seat of government being periodically divided between La Paz, Cochabamba and Sucre. There are now sight departments in the republic of Bo-livia—Chaguisaca, La Paz, Cochabamba, Potosi, Aruro, Santa Cruz, Tarija, and El Beni. The departments are divided into provinces, and these subdivided into can tons. The standing army consists now of about 2,500 men and 16,000 national guards. There is a university at Sucre, with faculties of law, medicine and the ology. The high and common schools are of small importance. The produc-tion of Peruvian bark is increasing and much care is now taken to grow a superior article. There are about 3,842,000 trees from five to ten years old in the country, and they can safely be valued at $20,000,000. When better communication to the seaboard is obtained all the productions of the country will increase im-mensely. The department of Beni con-
