A Cold Wedding Trip. Justice Barnett married the first couple vesterday since he has taken his seat. The contracting parties were Hugh Thompson, of Creston, Ia., and Anna March, of North Bend, Neb. The couple were to have been married at 4 o'clock, but on account of some delay they missed the 3 o'clock duffiny in Omaha and were compelled to engage a hack to cross the ice. The hack dri ver, who told them it would be worth a five-dollar bill, had never been to Council Bluffs before and did not know the road, but after wandering around on the bottoms finally succeeded in reaching the justice's office about 5 o'clock, when, to the disgust of the groom, he discovered three persons in the justice's office awaiting to see the event. He quietly informed the justice that he had brought a lady and gentle-man friend who would act as witnesses to the marriage and requested the three obnoxious persons, which included a BEE man, to withdraw, after which the ceremony was completed. The groom went out and purchased a pint flask of sherry wine to warm up the ladies, as they were very cold after having ridden about seven miles. The entire party returned to Omaha and to-day the newly wedded couple will go to Creston, their future

THE DAILY BEE. SAVING THE OYSTER SHELLS

So That They Can Be Used as Disbes For Serving Again.

A VERY CHILLY BRIDAL TRIP Services In Memory of John A. Logan - The Doings of a Dull Sunday In Council Bluffs.

Second-Hand Shells.

The other day a BEE man was standing near a door which led to the kitchen of one of the hotels in this city and noticing a man enter the door with a basket containing some very large oyster shells his curiosity was at once aroused. The first thing that suggested itself was that the empty shells were used in the dining room to serve oysters on the half shell, and upon inquiry from those who knew and have been in this business it was learned that such was the case and it is by no means original in this particular case referred to. "Of course we serve ovsters on the half shell," said a well known waiter at one of the hotels to the BEE man who put the question. "No, they never buy oysters in the shell as they are too expensive," he continued, "but when oysters on the half shell are ordered, we take some old shells and lay New York counts on them and serve them. If they are put on nicely and in good style with a half lemon laid on one side of the dish, who do you sup-pose would fall? They look inviting and not one person in a thousand knows the difference. Another thing, most everybody who eats oysters and have ever-eaten them in the east have forgotten how oysters on the shell taste; you know oveters away east and oysters out here have a much different taste-all our oysters are received in bulk, in tubs, while east they are taken directly out of the shell and sold, when they sell oysters there by the quart or gallon they open the oysters, put them in a large vessel and measure them out to the trade. If a man comes direct from the east and orders oysters, if you watch him, you'll find in nine cases out of ten he'll stick up his nose at them after having tasted one; the stews, fries, raws or anyway you serve them don't have the same fine flavor, and that's why so many people out here say 'I don't care for oysters; I can't see how you can eat them.' It's the same way with salt water fish here; they don't seem to have that delicious flavor they do cast. Yes, that's quite a dodge, but it's a fact that all the oyster shells are asc arefully handled almost, as dishes, so as not to nick them; then when oysters on the shell are wanted they take them out of the tub and lay them on the shell and you have 'oysters on the half shell,' don't "There is, I believe, only one firm in this city who receive oysters from the east in the shell, and I'm under the impression that they don't handle many," said a gentleman who is informed on the subject. "But the shells are handled often enough. You see skell oysters are expensive and unless you are familiar with the oyster you can't tell if it has just been shucked or if it is a 'count' laid on an old shell and served. Oyster shells are articles of commerce in this part of the country. The man who opens oysters after serving them-mvariably on the half shell-saves the shell. The next day some lady will drive up in her car-riage and order lifty or more shells, as she is to have a reception, a luncheon, a Kensington tea or something of the sort or a restaurant, hotel or somebody will Substantial abstracts of titles and real estate loans. J. W. & E. L. Squire. No. 101 Pearl street, Council Bluffs. was affairs in this part of the west don't get shell oysters; they use knows the difference. You know the eye is always fastened to the oyster shell, unless cut loose, and no man back east who knows his business will allow one to stick but out here things work differently, and no man who knows his busi ness will cut one loose, as that is proof of its being a shell oyster, and those who really do have shell oysters will allow the eye to stick in order that the customer may be assured that he is not being served with bulk oysters on the half shell. Nice deep oyster shells are in demand. People buy canned oysters and get deep shells and roast the oyster in the shell. At the places where you see the sign 'oysters in all styles' you can't get half shell oysters in one place out of a hundred, they may serve them on a second-hand shell. Oyster shells are used for chickens, but chickens don't get any nice shells out here. All they get is the old broken shells which, of course, answers the purpose. Blue Points, East Rivers, Long Island Sounds, etc., on a bill of fare, menu, etc., generally means, in this part of the west, second-hand oyster shells with nice, arge bulk oysters laid on the shells; but in a few places you can find some of these famous shell oysters if you have the 'dust' to purchase them. In Memory of Logan.

There was quite a large gathering in the Temple hall yesterday afternoon at the Logan memorial services. The hall was appropriately decorated. The platform was draped in the sombre black, and back of the speakers was a large flag on which rested a life size oil painting of the great general. The representation of the Fifteenth army corps, as made by E. J. Abbott, and already described in the Bee, was given a prominent place at the side of the platform. Directly in front of the platform was the John A. Logan gun brought from the Grand Army hall. It was gracefully draped. The veterans marched into the hall in a body, McFadden's drum corps furnishing the music for the march from the headquarters to the place of the services.

The memorial services were well arranged, and although there were a number of speakers the whole did not occupy much over an hour. Colonel R. C. Hub bard presided. The programme opened with a chorus by Messrs. Treynor, Hunter, Conger, Stacy and Fitch. Rev. Henry DeLong offered a patriotic and earnest prayer. Judge Reed was the first speaker. He spoke of Logan as one who had already made a mark in public affairs before the war in which he took so brilliant a part. He pictured Logan in the national convention of the party with which he affillated in 1860, and how it was Logan's voice which nurled back defiance to the throats of the fire-enters. He was the most conspicuous example of citizen soldiery. He was not only brave, but showed a great aptitude for arms. One word from him in battle was worth more than a thousand men in inspiriting the troops. He was not only a model soldier, but no less a model citizen. Born in an humble station of life, he rose to the highest. Some of his provincialisms of speech clong to him, and his reckless use of English was made a butt by jokers, but make an address to a gathering of his old make an address to a gathering of his old soldiers two years ago. In that address he called attention to the fact that soon the last of them would be gone. Little was thought then that this apparently perfect specimen of physical vigor would be so soon to go. His example should serve to inspire the remnant of the Grand Army to so live as to win esteem from their country and their friends.

Rev. Dr. McCreary was the next speaker. He termed Logan a true hero. No words could add to his fame. His name by his words and deeds was forever emblazoned on the pages of Amer-ican history, and so long as those pages were read so long would it be reverenced. One by one these great leaders were being called away. They did not die, They still lived. They were immortal. Their deeds and influence lived on forever. Their noble lives continue to serve as an inspiration, and their noble works as a blessing to mankind, Although a public man, a politician, a military chief-tain, he was a consecrated christian. He believed in the truths of christianity, and was not ashamed to take a public as such a believer. It was this belief that was his strength. It enables him to say, "If this be the end I am ready." His integrity was a wonderful example. The past twenty-five years of national life had been full of strong temptations for all public men. Great monopolies had sprung up, and these poured their mill ions into the legislative halls. Many public men had their names tarnished. No such breath of scandal had ever dared to touch the name of John A Logan. He passed through this trying ordeal an honest man to the very last His soul spurned a bribe, and he he lived, an an honest example for the

T. J. Mackay followed. He said he had addressed his congregation in the morning on the deplorable worship of wealth which characterized this age. There had been the age of chivalry, the age of intellect, but this to his mind was he age in which wealth was worshipped. He felt rebuked by the gathering at service. They had come there not to do homage to wealth, not to do homage to brute force, but to do homage to true manhood as shown in the life of the one whose death had caused such sadness. They felt that he had sprung from them. was one of them, bone of their bone, flesh of their flesh, and yet when in one of the highest places in the nation, within one step of the very highest, he was looked on as the friend of every man. Mr. Mackay declared that he was himself no hero worshipper, and cared nothing for titles, and he joined in the tributes paid, because he recognized the tributes of this occasion as not being paid because it was a good man who had tallen out of the the ranks, but to the great moral worth of the man. It showed that there was something higher than generals or kings, and that was a man, true to his better self and true to God. He urged the hearers to recognize their own dignity and responsibility as citizens, and to realize that true manhood was above wealth or position. If citizens followed the example thus set by the illustrious dead, were true to their convictions of duty, were true to themselves, there would be no wanting to the nation such men as Judge Carson made a very pleasing ad dress. He spoke chiefly of Logan's faithfulness to duty. He did not feel superiority to others, but simply performed what seemed to be the duty at his hand. In civil as well as military life he was every inch a man, thus lived, thus

Colonel Hubbard gave one of the best addresses of the afternoon. He spoke as a representative of the citizen soldiery. Logan was especially dear to them be cause he was their greatest example. He had no military training. He was a vol-unteer, and yet he showed such rare powers that he rose rapidly to the very highest positions, and won the most signal victories. It showed that though there was not a graduate from West Point, although there was no special military training, there was in the Ameri can people inherent qualities which in case of need could produce leaders who would be able to cope with any of the great chieftains of the world. Logan was especially endeared to them because he was so true to the demands of duty. When on the eve of a battle in the early part of the war another colonel rode up to the then Colonel Logan, and said, "I out rank you and will therefore take the post of honor," Logan replied, "I care not a flip about the post of honor, what I want is to get into this light someway." That showed the man. Duty was the chief aim of his life. Another cause was that he never degraded American citizenship. When another officer had caused a soldier to be punished by being tied up by his thumbs, Logan on his sick bed hearing of it, sent Mrs. Logan to have the man cut down. He would not have a man punished in such a way as to degrade his citizenship. He was also just to the soldiers, both furing the war and since its close showed that he was their friend and com-

G. M. Harl was the next speaker. As usual his address, though ex tempore, was graceful and eloquent. He paid special attention to the home life of Logan. He pictured him as a mode husband and father.

Spencer Smith gave the closing address It was a fitting tribute to American wom-anhood, as exemplified in the life of Mrs Logan, who had done so much to stay the hands of the great chief and cheer his heart. It was most appropriate that such a tribute should be paid on such an occasion. In closing he made a motion that resolution of sympathy be forwarded to Mrs. Logan as an expression of the feel-ing of the gathering, and this was adopted by a unanimous uplifting of the hands of those present.

The services closed by the congrega-tion rising and joining in singing 'Amer-ica,' led by the male chorus of singers. Rev. G. W. Croft then dismissed them with the benediction.

Christian Science. The Rev. J. S. Meville, scientist preached yesterday afternoon in the Western Commercial college hall in the Shugart building to about 150 persons which comfortably filled the room.

Rev. Meville was formerly a Baptist preacher with headquarters at Carroll, Ia., and is now a christian scientist with a class at Nebraska City. He preached Sunday, January 2, in the same hall and at the request of the christian scientists in he again preached yesterday.

The audience or congregation was composed of about an equal number of ladie and gentlemen interested in the science and composed of many well known residents of the city. He chose as his text Matt. 17-1: The transfiguration of Christ. In the earlier ages God taught man by picture lessons and later Christ taught by parable. This transfiguration revealed God's only man-ner of communication with man and man's only communication with God. God is a spirit, and they that worship him most worship him in spirit and in truth. This transfiguration was to show man what he really In the people understood him. His place could not be filled. Illinois could elect another senator of perhaps equally fidelity and ability, but no one could take his place in the hearts of the people, and of the organization that looked up to him as their idol. Judge Reed said he heard Logan in the looked said he looked said he heard Logan in the looked said he look COUNCIL BLUFFS BOOMS!

that he becomes spiritual and can worship God who is a spirit, as God made man in his own image, what then is man, spiritual or material? Like begets like: spirit cannot create that which is not only unlike itself but is directly opposed, for matter or flesh is opposed to spirit. The belief that pain and pleasure, in life and death, holiness and unholiness, mingle in man, that they are a part of man, that man is at the same time in the likeness and image of God, in the image of life; truth and love is spiritually conceived and created; all the vanity of the ages cannot make that contradiction true. Spirituality dis-sipates the illusion that life or mind is in the material body, God being a holy spirit cannot hold communication with earnal man except through one who can stand in the breach and, figuratively speaking, be able to lay one hand upon God, the other upon man, and thus bring them together-a mediator to introduce us to the presence of God. Thus Jesus said: "I am the way, truth and life." Be-fore man can reach the spiritual altitude where he can see God, he must first behold Jesus on the cross. Man must be crucified with Him.
