The heavy rain of Tuesday night made and havoc with the curbing on Mynster street, and yesterday much of the work had to be done over. A SHORT DELAY PROBABLE.

Another Bridge Delay. What news about the bridge? The question is asked so frequently and by so many that the man who attempts to answer soon wearies. The frequency of the question and the eagerness with which an answer is looked for indicates how much importance is placed by this community upon the securing of a wagon bridge as a connecting link between this city and Omaha. There is little news to give the readers of the BEE beyond the announcement that there will probably be no news for some days or weeks yet. The parties interested in securing the site for a railway bridge have asked for a further hearing, and those who are working for a wagon bridge naturally want to be heard again also, if there is to be any hearing given their opponents. The Union Pacific railway also wants a hearing on this question, and representa-tives of each bridge interest have gone on to Washington. In the meantime Secretary Endicott is still in Massachusetts, but is expected daily to return to Washington. Before his departure Sec-retary Endicott referred some legal questions to the attorney general, and asked for an opinion upon them. It is under-stood by those concerned that the ques-tion as to the site will not be settled for several weeks to come. As one of the wagon bridge company expresses it, "they've got the thing hung up for two or three weeks longer." There seems much confidence that the wagon bridge company, which has its plans all ready

The Female Ward. For a city laying claims to civilization there is a disgraceful manner of using female prisoners, brought into the city jail. The rooms on the second floor are supposed to be for the female prisoners, but a glance at the accommodations is sufficient to convince anyone that they are not fit for animals, much less human beings. It matters little how fallen a woman is, the city should not descend to the same low grade. The room chiefly used has a bare floor, which bears no evidences of having seen water for months. There is an old mattress on the floor, and another smaller but dirtier one floor, and another smaller but dirtier one on a cot. A few coverlets, or blankets, are there to complete the furnishing of the beds. These have evidently been strangers to pure water or air. To add to the dirtiness and discomfort of the place there are more bedbugs than can be slaughtered by a train load of insect poison. It is not to be expected that the city will furnish parlors for the accommodation of drunken prostitutes, but it would be better to have such women put into a bare ter to have such women put into a bare but well scrubbed room, until sober enough to take care of themselves. Some of the female prisoners are not filthy, but even if they were, it is difficult to see any reason for the city making them still worse by turning them into a place where vermin and dirt are the chief characteristics. In this age of soap and water-works, three marshals and 100 feet of hose ought to be able to keep the place a little less habitable for vermin and more

Dell Perkins, who was run over and lost a leg on the Northwestern railway, is still at the Cottage hospital, A short time ago he made a settlement with the railway company, by which he received $1,100 in full for all claims and damages. The money was placed in a bank, and that same day he was married to the woman who had been attending him during his illness, she being a friend from Omaha. The county having been to considerable expense to furnish nurses and physician, an attachment suit has been begun by the county attorney, and $250 of the money seized. Perkins is not able to eave the hospital yet. It is claimed that he was preparing to go away without set-tling the bills which the county had incurred for his care.

THE HEROINE OF TWO WARS. The Romantic Life Story of "Old

New York Mail and Express: There died in an humble apartment in this city the other day a woman with a remarkable history, if her statements are trustworthy. Even her neighbors did not know her real name, and it is from a friend of the woman, who had heard her history frequently, that the story comes. She was the daughter of an English lord and heiress to a moderate estate. On the adjoining estate lived another lord to whose son she was betrothed. When the Crimean war broke out the lover enlisted. For a few months after his departure letters were received with regularity from him, and he seemed to be in good health and spirits. Suddenly all correspondence ceased. His name did not appear in the death list which were published in the London papers, and it was evident he was either sick or a pris-Crazy Peggy.

oner. In an agony of fear and anxiety, she could stand the suspense no longer, and determined to go in quest of him. Her parents, however, forbade it, and her friends dissuaded her for a short time. But the continued silence proved unbearable, and she finally stole from her home one night, secured an appointment as nurse, and before her relations had obtained a clew to her whereabouts, was on her way to the front abouts, was on her way to the front. Reaching the Bosphorous, she was placed in one of the hospitals at a small town near the border. She scanned with ea-gerness the faces of the sick and dying, but found no sign of him she sought. Remembering that he might be in the same condition as were the poor soldiers around her, she entered into the work of ministration with all her heart. Her ministration with all her heart. Her efforts were rewarded in an unexpected way, for one day, in talking with one of the wounded men, she ascertained that he had been in the same regiment with her lover, and that the latter was a captive in the hands of the Russians. From that moment, although quietly continuing her nursing, she bent all her facilities to planning some scheme, by which ties to planning some scheme by which she might gain access to her lover's place of confinement. She finally concluded to assume the role of a spy, and requested permission from the commanding officer to act in that capacity. He at first refused, but upon her pleading carnestly he gave his consent and supplied her with the papers necessary for her passing the English lines.

She disguised herself and pretended she was half-witted, and by that means got within the Russian territory. So artfully did she play her part that she became quite a favorite with the soldiers, who styled her "Crazy Peggy," and allowed her to do as she pleased. It was many weeks before she learned the town in which her betrothed was a prisoner. in which her betrothed was a prisoner, By a neat stratagem she induced the keeper of the prison to give her access to the cells. The jailer thought her a harmless creature, and permitted her to chat at will with the English captives. She soon disclosed her identity to her lover, soon disclosed her identity to her lover, and together they planned an escape. On a dark, stormy night she acted more insanely than ever, and in one of her fits snatched the keys from the belt of the warden. Running down the stairs, she unlocked several of the doors, including the one behind which her betrothed was confined. In that instant trothed was confined. In that instant he was out, and, hidden in a dark corner, he donned a Russian uniform furnished by the faithful girl. The jailer gave chase to "Crazy Peggy" and regained the keys, but not before her lover had walked up the stairs and out into the open air. "Peggy" followed him and they fled through the darkness until they reached the picket line. Here the pass-reached the picket line. Here the pass-word, which had been discovered by "Peggy," enabled them to gain the open space between the rival armies. An English coat, concealed beneath her clothes, was put on and the Russian uni-form discarded. In safety the lines were passed and the officer returned to his command. So well executed had been all of Peggy's plans, and so anxious was her betrothed to continue in service that they both remained in the army, she as a spy and he as an officer. They were married by a chaplain, however, before married by a chaplain, however, before entering again into active duty.

Just before the conclusion of the war the husband died. Nearly heartbroken, Peggy accompanied the remains to England, to find that her parents were dead, and that there was nothing left for her except a neat little estate. The associations of the place were so painful that she determined to come to America. She she determined to come to America. She did so and settled in one of the Carolinas, where she taught the slaves several times a week, without the permission of the owners.

The rebellion broke out soon after, and the old war fever coursed through "Peggy's" veins. She enlisted as a nurse in the confederate army. But her ability as a spy reached the ears of one of the officers, and she agreed to undertake the dangerous business. She disguised herself, and as a half-witted woman went at will through the confederate and union armies. Twice she was held on suspicion armies. Twice she was held on suspicion, and once was placed under guard until an examination could be had. In some way she managed to destroy the papers on her person and was released. A few evenings later she was attacked by a drunken picket and received wounds that scarred her face badly for the rest of her life. In fact, it was largely because of her repulsive countenance that during the last twenty years she has kept in ab-solute retirement. Her favorite com-mander was General Robert E. Lee, and he regarded her with marked respect. Peggy said that once, at General Lee's personal request, she got as far as Washington and secured some important in formation. Before she could get back within the confederate lines, however, she was shut up in an insane asylum. She escaped, but too late to render the news of any practical use. When she first came from England, she invested most of her estate in land and property in the South. The war almost impoverished her, but she managed to save enough to keep her in an numble way ever since. Soon after the rebellion she came north and lived at various times in Pittsnorth and lived at various times in Pitts-burg, Philadelphia and Boston. Then for some reason she went to Newark, N. J., where she resided until several years ago, when she came to this city and took two plain rooms up town. She was cul-tured, and was understood to have cor-respondence with a number of eminent men here and in England, under an as-sumed name. (Search) Lee wrote to her sumed name. General Lee wrote to her up to the time of his death. "Peggy," refused to disclose her real name to her new friends, but she evi-dently had distinguished relatives in England. She admitted close relation-ship to Mrs. Gladstone and the duchess of Cumherland. Her knowledge of the English stage and its lights was also ex-tensive, and she said she had known all the leading actors and actresses of a quarter of a century ago in London. Un-known "Peggy" was not quite fifty years old, and had evidently been handsome in her younger days. She once admitted in confidence that her husband's name was Edward Lewis, but never reyealed her maiden name.

"UMBRELLAS TO MEND."

A Comparatively New Industry, With Some Figures.

Inuianapolis News: An umbrella repairer's den is almost as interesting a place as an old book shop. A few years ago, when tramps were abroad in the land in large numbers, many of them armed themselves with hammers and umbrella frames that the tinker's disguise might shield them in the surreptitious in-spection of window fastenings. But now the repairer of faded and infirm um-brellas has a place in the world, and al-though rascals may be in the business, they are fewer than they used to be. There are in this city some six or eight men who conduct hospitals for the treatment of rain-protectors, and two men manufacture umbrellas from stick to cover at the order of customers.

Any boy that's got a head on 'im and can do anything can mend an umbrella,"

The magnitude of the umbrella business may pretty fairly be estimated. Of course they are changed about and traded in mysterious ways, but about and traded in mysterious ways, but offenses of this kind do not fall within the provisions of the penal code. The city's umbrellas are worth, if they be valued at the average of $1 each, the sum of $10,000. The valuation may be rather large, but a few cents added to the intrinsic worth will serve to count for the mental disturbance of owners in guarding their property. Taking it for granted that every umbrella of the possible 100,000 has to be repaired during the year, and guessing at the cost of the work for each one to be 6c (a very low estimate, by the way), some (a very low estimate, by the way), some idea of the financial returns of the re-
