ELEVENTH STREET VIADUCT.

The Structure Found to Be in a Very Shabby Condition.

WAS THERE A JOB IN IT?

Insufficient Police Protection in the City of Omaha—Local Notes Picked Up By Bee Reporters.

The Eleventh Street Viaduct.

No wonder people who cross the Eleventh street viaduct take the roadway in preference to the sidewalk. Anyone who will take the trouble to visit that causeway will understand that they have the best of reasons for doing so.

The specifications provide that the walk shall be made of oak plank securely fastened to a layer of pine plank. In the first place these plank lack about a foot of extending to the inside hand rail, as they should do, and the oak plank which cover the space are from a half-inch to an inch and a half apart in many places.

But, perhaps the worst feature about the walk is that these oak plank are warped so that they stick up along the entire length of the viaduct, from a half inch to an inch and three-fourths. Small round nails were fastened to the underside of the planks, and the result has been that by the warping of the oak plank these nails have been pulled out.

A man with moderate exertion can pull the boards entirely loose from the stringers. The boards have since shrunk, and the nails, in most instances, do not touch the stringers at all.

The inside hand rails have no braces of any kind to keep them steady and can be shaken back and forth for a distance of four or five inches on either side, without scarcely an exertion at all. The fastenings of these inside railings to the batter posts is very flimsy and imperfect.

In fact, about half the plates by which these rails are intended to be fastened are not screwed up at all. The painting of the viaduct has been done in a most hasty and slovenly way. In many places, there are spots where the iron has no more paint on it than when it came from the foundry where it was made.

The number of policemen on duty last night, about 100, is not sufficient to guard the city. It is believed that the city should have at least ninety policemen. Instead of this number, Omaha had but twelve policemen on duty last night.

The bank clearings yesterday amounted to $565,396.46. Collections at the internal revenue office yesterday amounted to $7,385.04.

There continues to be a large influx of men from Iowa to take the place of the strikers and a considerable number of the latter are leaving town to seek work elsewhere. Most of these men are artisans of the better class whom it is generally conceded by the masters that the new comers are for the most part incompetent.

William Aistadt, who is now as "Hismarck" in the County Clerk Needham's office for some time past, was made the subject of an agreeable surprise last night. His fellow employes presented him with a gold-headed cane at his residence No. 820 South Sixteenth street as a testimonial of their friendship and esteem.

The Olympia theatre has been nightly crowded since its opening. The success of the enterprise is apparent, and Messrs. Farley & Cole have demonstrated that strictly first-class variety theatre properly conducted would receive the hearty support of the amusement-loving public.

At 10 o'clock yesterday morning the fire department was called to the corner of Third and Walnut streets for a fire in residence of a man named Johnson. Children had been exploding fire crackers and had thus set fire to the house.

The case of Charles Groves, familiarly known as "Shorty," was called in police court yesterday afternoon. Groves was charged with mayhem in biting off a portion of Larry Casey's ear in a street fight. Casey is the man who was with George Nugent in the fight which was shot Tuesday morning.
