THE BATTLE OF THE KEGS.

It Is Renewed With an Opening Fire of Injunction Arguments.

DEATH OF TWO OLD SETTLERS.

Mrs. Josephat Last Given Matrimonial Freedom-Decisions in Uncle Sam's Court-A Merry Party Watching the Regatta.

The Injunction Cases. Judge Carson sat yesterday patiently istening to the arguments in the saloon cases. There are many of these, and while they are divided up in classes, involving in some respects different questions, yet in the main they are of the same general character. The arguments made yesterday involved principles which affected all the cases more or less. The chief battle was, however, in regard to Maloney & Frum, of the Pacific house billiard rooms. A petition had been filed asking for a temporary writ of in-junction against them, and making Henry Eiseman also a defendant, as trustee for the owners of the property. A demurrer was filed against his being made a defendant, and this brought about a discussion of the relations of the owners of property, the occupants of owners of property, the occupants of which were charged with seiling liquors in violation of law. Jacob Sims appeared for the state, "alias Overton," as Colonel Sapp terms it. On the other side where Supp & Pusey, Mr. Haldene and Mr. Mynster. In support of the demurrer it was claimed that the petition for an injunction could not be petition for an injunction could not be directed against the owner of property, unless it was alleged that he acted in col lusion with the men who were selling the liquor, or that it was with his knowledge and consent that the property was thus used for illegal purposes. The petition not alleging either of these conditions, the demurrer should be sustained. The attorneys claimed that the owner of such property was, under the prohibition law, authorized to cancel a lease after a law, authorized to cancel a lease after a final hearing of an injunction against a tenant, but there was no authority for his cancelling a lease before a final hearing. It was declared absurd to issue a temporary writ against the owner of the property, restraining him from having any liquor sold in his place, so long as a tenant was in possession, and the owner had no power to throw him out. It amounted simply to compelling the owner to sit down in his compelling the owner to sit down in his building with a club, and keep the ten-ant from selling any strong drink. After a final hearing the owner had power to cancel the lease, but having no such power before, it was not right to place him under an order of court compelling him to do something which he could not do. In regard to the injunctions issued against buildings the attorneys for the against buildings, the attorneys for the defendants, and especially Mr. Haldene, made such injunctions appearivery ridic-ulous. He illustrated his idea by supposing that in case of a dead dog being a nuisance, a judge should issue an injunction restraining the dog from giving forth an unpleasant oder. The dog was inanimate, and would continue to emit its smell to high heaven. It was equally absurd to issue an injunction against a pile of brick and mortar, restraining it from allowing itself to be used as a place for the sale of liquors. The brick and mortar could not help itself. The injunction could not in good sense issue against an inanimate object, and could only issue against the owner of the property. It could not be directed towards the owner unless alleged that he was willingly a party to maintaining the nuisance.

Mr. Sims cited authority showing that the supreme court had decided the question, and in his favor. Just such a petition as that in controversy had been in the contest for two years, and had stood in every court and every case.

The questions were taken under advisement by Judge Carson. The contempt of court cases were continued until Wednesday. It is not expected that there well be anything very definite resulting from this legal warfare until the close of the week, and perhaps not then. Every possible question is being raised by the

The Old Settlers Dying.

Two of this county's oldest residents were buried Sunday. One C. W. Mc Intosh, of Crescent township, was aged 71 years, and had resided here since 1848. The other, Henry Wade was a resident of Boomer township, and had resided in this county for over forty years. He was a father-in-law of Hon. L. S. Axtell.

Mrs. Joseph Wins. One of the dirtiest family washings ever hung on the court line was that of Joseph vs. Joseph. Each charged the other with infidelity, and the details of their home troubles were aired fully at their home troubles were aired fully at the trial some weeks ago. Judge Carson has been thinking over the matter, and yesterday decided to give Mrs. Joseph her desired freedom, and also to give her the custody of the child. She lives in Omaha, while her husband remains here in the employ of one of the agricultural implement houses.

Uncle Sam's Court, F. M. Hunter, clerk of the United States court, yesterday received two decisions from Judge Love. One was in the case of A. J. Crittenden vs. the Fire-men's Fund Insurance company. In this case a trial by jury resulted in the plaintiff's favor, but a motion was made for a new trial. Judge Love overrules this motion, thus affirming the judgment in Mr. Crittenden's favor. Mr. Crittenden had the policy in controversy assigned him, it being upon property belonging to Mr. Cregier, at Logan, who turned the insurance over to his creditors. The other case in which a decision was rendered was that involving the Mc-Mahon property, which was recently foreclosed under a mortgage. Judge Love orders a stay of proceedings until a further hearing can be had at the next term of court, which opens September 1.

The Story of a Lost Watch. Philadelphia Call: "For some time," said the doctor, "I have been attending a colored man on Wood street. There was no money in the case, but a true physician never thinks of that, and I kept pegging away at my man until 1 got him on the turn. Then he fell back again and I began to think his mind was diseased—that is, that he was brooding over something, and that plays the mischief with medicine. You take the case of a beautiful girl who loses her hair from fevr. Her recovery is retarded for weeks if you give her a looking-glass.

"Well, I kept quiet and made myself friendly, and one day the secret came out. He waited until he was alone with me, and then he asked me to go to a closet in the room and hunt up a black stocking. I did so and handed it to him, and he took therefrom something that looked like a bundle of rags. Removing the rags disclosed a roll of paper, tied with old twine, and inside was a piece of chamois, and inside of that a beautiful gold watch. I had been watching these proceedings with considerable interest, and when I saw the watch I jumped at once to the conclusion that my patient was about to make restitution for a robbery, I was mistaken.

", You's away off, boss,' said he, with a smile, as he evidently read my thoughts. 'I didn't stole that watch; I found 'um. I I didn't stole that watch; I found 'um. I picked up that watch 'bout a year ago on the corner of Thirteenth and Market, near Wannymaker's, and I want to give 'um back before I die.' The story looked fishy, but it all turned out naturally enough when I questioned him. He found the watch and brought it home and told no one about it for fear of being robbed. He dudn't advertise it because robbed. He didn't advertise it because he had no money to pay for the adver-tisement, and he didn't read the papers to see if a reward had been offered, simply because neither he nor any of his family could read. So he hid the watch in a closet and did nothing at all.

"I examined the watch and saw that it was a lady's watch, and valuable. On the inside of the case was engraved a date and the name 'Sarah Matilda Shreve.' Here was a clew. 'What do you want me to do with this?' I asked. He replied that I was to find the owner, and return the watch with or without re-ward, and he seemed actually grateful as I carried it away.

"When I returned to my office I got When I returned to my office I got out the directory and wrote a letter to every Shreve in the city, about a half dozen, detailing the circumstances and asking for Sarah Matilda. The next day I got a letter from a Shreve, teiling me that the owner of the watch was now the wife of a prominent citizen—never mind his name—and lived at Seventeenth and Pine. That afternoon I called on the lady, told my story, and she identified the watch beyond question and told how she lost it coming from Broad street station.

"She was gratified at its recovery, and surprised when she heard where it had been for a year, and I am happy to say that her gratitude did not stop at words. The next day she called to see my patient, and left a liberal present behind her, and she has been a regular caller ever since. The result is that my man is getting well, and it looks now as if his modest future was assured. I tell you this story just to illustrate what good policy honesty is. He might have realized $20 by selling the watch, but he resisted the temptation, and he will realize ten times that amount now. I think there is a good sound moral to this

Adventures With the Grizzly Bear. Harper's Magazine for August: Few persons believe a grizzly will attack a a man before he is himself attacked. I was one of these doubting Thomases until two years ago, when I was thoroughly convinced by occular demonstration that some grizzlies, at least, will attempt to make a meal off a man even though he may not have harmed them previously. We were hunting in the Shoshone mountains in northern Wyoming. I had killed a large elk in the morning, and on going back to the carcass in the afternoon to skin it we saw that bruin had been there ahead of us, but had fled at our approach Without the least apprehension of his re-turn, we leaned our rifles against a tree about lifty feet away, and commenced work. There were three of us, but only two rifles, Mr. Huffman, the photograph er, having left his in camp. He had in-ished taking views of the carcass, and we were all busily engaged skinning, when, hearing a crashing in the brush and a series of savage roars and growls, we looked up the hill, and were horrified to see three grizzly bears, an old female and two cubs about two-thirds grown charging upon us with all the savage fury of a pack of starving wolves upon a

They were between us and our rifles when we first saw them, and we sprang yards below, supposing, of course, that when the bears reached the elk carcass they would proceed to eat it, and pay no further attention to us. Strange to say, it was the carcass to which they paid no attention. They still came after us; we had no time for fight, and could not even release and mount our terrorstricken horses. Our only chance was to fight for our lives, and with one accord we all three grasped our hunting-knives and dashed at them. We threw our hats and yelled like Comanches, and the savand yelled like Comanches, and the savage brutes, seeing themselves thus boldly confronted by equal numbers, stopped, raised on their haunches, growled, snapped their jaws for a few moments, and then walked sullenly back up the hill into the brush. This gave us an opportunity to get hold of our rifles, and then it was our turn to charge. To make a long story short, we killed the old female and one cub; the other escaped into the jungle before we could get a shot at him. The resolute front we put on alone saved our lives.

The grizzly is partially nocturnal in The grizzly is partially nocturnal in his habits, and apparently divides his labor of obtaining food and his traveling about equally between day and night. It is not definitely known to what age he lives in his wild state, ; but he is supposed to attain to twenty-five or thirty years. Notwithstanding the great courage and ferocity of this formidable beast, he will utter the most pitable groans and howls when seriously or mortally wounded.

Another instance of a grizzly making an unprovoked attacked upon a man was vouched for by a man whom I know to be strictly truthful. Two brothers were prospecting in a range of moun-tains near the head-waters of the Stinkink Water river. The younger of the two, though an able-bodied man, and capable of doing a good day's work with a pick or shovel, was a weak-minded and the elder brother never allowed him to go any distance away from camp or their work alone. He, however, sent him one evening to a spring, a few rods off,to bring a kettleful of water. The spring was in a deep gorge, and the trail to it wound through some fissures in the rock. As the young man passed under a shelving rock, an immense old female grizzly, that had taken up temporary quarters there, reached out and struck a powerful blow at his head, but fortunately could not reach far enough to do him any serious harm. The blow knocked his hat off, and her claws caught his scalp and laid it open clear across the scalp and laid it open clear across the top of his head in several ugly gashes. The force of the blow sent him spinning around, and not knowing enough to be frightened, he attacked her savagely with the only weapon he had at hand—the camp kettle. The elder brother heard the racket, and, hastily catching up his rifle, found his brother vigorously belaboring the bear over the head with the camp kettle, and the bear striking at him camp kettle, and the bear striking at him savage blows, any one of which, if she could have reached him. would have torn his head from his shoulders. Three bullets from the rifle, fired in rapid succession, loosened her hold upon the rocks, and she tumbled lifelessly into the trail.

the army, he ordered a person in whom he had confidence to visit the contiguous northern states, madvertently saying to him, "Buy as many as you can"—not supposing he would be able to secure more than a few thousand at the most. Some weeks afterward, just before the attack upon Hood's army, General Donaldson, on meeting his agent, inquired how many mules he had been able to secure. To the amazement of the general he was informed that 20,000 or more had been obtained. Upon which the astonished general exclaimed: "I am a ruined man! I shall be court martialed and driven from the army for not limiting you in the purchase. You have procured many times more than I had any idea or intention of purchasing; but the fault is not mine, not yours. I ought to have been particular in my orders." In an ex-tremely disheartened state he went to his home believing that such a thought-less act on his part could not be over-looked by the commanding general.
