 A stranger in the city fell in a fit on Main street last evening. He was taken to the police station and a physician called, who pronounced his case not immediately dangerous. A man went from one spasmodic another, having six or seven during the evening.
 The new hotel, Goldstone, at Des Moines, of which Ed Howe, a Council Bluffs boy, is one of the proprietors, opened yesterday afternoon and the first meal was served yesterday. Mr. Howe's many acquaintances and friends in this vicinity will watch with interest his career as a hotel man. The new hotel is five stories, is fire proof, and is elegantly fitted up.
 Joseph Wells has been chosen as Sunday school missionary for Pottawattamie county. This county was at one time the banner one in Sunday school work, there being one-half of all the children of the county enrolled in Sunday schools. A missionary, or county superintendent was at that time employed, and was kept busy organizing schools. The work has been allowed to rest lately, but now it is proposed to start it up afresh. Mr. Wells has been engaged heretofore in Y. M. C. A. work. It is believed that he will prove the right man for the right place.

 The Council Bluffs boat house stands on "Regatta Place."
 Bear in mind that Lake Manawa is not only within thirty minutes drive of Council Bluffs, but Omaha as well, and the day is not far distant when 300,000 people in these two cities will take great interest in this—the only breathing spot in western Iowa or eastern Nebraska.
 Shot a Dummy.
 The Avenue restaurant on lower Broadway was the scene of an exciting episode last night about 11 o'clock. The proprietor was startled by a noise in the vicinity of his coop of chickens. He could just discern the form of a man and he fired at him with a shotgun. The fellow tumbled, and the armed restauranter, getting a light and help, went out to pick him up. It proved to be a "dummy" and clad in a pair of the proprietor's best pantaloons, the rear of which were riddled with shot.

Griffin Acquitted.
 The sensational case in which Dan Griffin was charged with making a brutal assault upon Ida Wyckhoff, fell to pieces yesterday. The information was filed by the elder sister of the unfortunate girl. The case came up before Justice Schurz yesterday. Ida went upon the stand and swore boldly in Griffin's behalf. She denied that he had ever treated her improperly. Of course this knocked the bottom out of the case, and Griffin was discharged. As soon as this feature of the case was disposed of, the girl was taken before Judge Aylesworth, where an application was filed for having her sent to the reform school. Evidence was taken showing her relations with Griffin, and the order was made out sending her to a place where she will be given a chance to recover from her fascination for the young man. She objected to going, and when she found that the next train would bear her away, made as a last request that she might see Griffin once more.

Car Cleaning Yards.
 The Union Pacific has now commenced the cleaning of its passenger coaches on this side of the river, that work having heretofore been done in Omaha. Now when the trains arrive here the coaches are not taken back across the river, as heretofore, but remain, are cleaned up and made ready for going out again. The yards for this purpose are quite extensive, provided with tracks and with water pipes, with storehouses and other conveniences. There are in the gang thus transferred to this side, forty-two men, under the charge of John Fleming. There are three outgoing and three incoming trains daily, averaging ten or twelve cars each. Ten of the men will be engaged on sleepers, the others on the regular coaches. These men live in Omaha, and work on this side, but as soon as they are furnished, and the changes made they will doubtless move over to this side.
 The roundhouse will be completed within two months, and then the engines will remain on this side, as well as the coaches. The change will be a helpful one to Council Bluffs, and as such is welcome.

Wants to Make Vinegar.
 Mr. Howe, of Tonawanda, N. Y., is in the city looking for a site for a vinegar factory. He wants about ten acres of land located with good railroad facilities, and purposes building at once if he can secure such a site at a reasonable price. The factory will employ twenty-five men and have a capacity of from fifty to seventy-five barrels a day. Sioux City and Omaha have both been holding forth some inducements, but it is believed that equally favorable locations can be secured here, and on some accounts this point seems more favorable to him.

A Scales Factory.
 Negotiations are pending for the removal from the east, and location in this city, of one of the largest scales factories in the land. Some local capitalists have become interested, and it seems very probable that the enterprise may be secured. It is reported that the Dierks works may be purchased for this purpose, and the buildings enlarged so as to accommodate the needs of the concern. Mr. Shugart has the matter in hand, and it is progressing as rapidly as it is possible considering the magnitude of the move.
A Missing Man.
 Andrew Castles left his home on North Eighth street, Council Bluffs, on the 30th of July, to go to work for Mr. Hamlin cutting curbing on South Fifteenth street, Omaha. He left his tools at Mr. Sweeney's shop on North Fifteenth street, on the 21st, since which time nothing can be learned concerning him. His wife is very anxious, as their babe is quite sick.

Cheap Ride.
 Purchase a "Regatta Place" today and thereby secure a free ride to and from charming Manawa.
The Drum Major.
 Yesterday morning there was quite a large gathering in Justice Schurz' court room to greet the well advertised drum major, Carbee, who was arraigned for a hearing. He was brought up from the county jail and seemed red headed in a double sense. He was indignant about having been kept in jail since Saturday without having been given a hearing. He had some rights and he had been taken advantage of ever since he struck the city. To hear him talk and see the flash of his eye one would easily be led to believe that he was greatly abused. There were several charges for him to meet. One was for stealing a drum major's uniform, belonging to John Beckler, and of the value of $50. He pleaded guilty to carrying this off, but denied that it was worth any such money. He wanted a chance to prove that it was not worth such an amount. There was also a charge of obtaining $50 worth of clothing of Metcalf Bros. under false pretense that he had money in the bank, and against which he drew a check. He concluded by this time that he had better secure a attorney, and when he had done so he withdrew his plea of guilty, and had his cases all continued until to-morrow. He then returned to his jail quarters.
Auction Sale of Lots.
 "Regatta Place," Lake Manawa, to-day at 3 p. m.
The River Excursion.
 There was a rush at the Pacific house last evening, to take conveyances for the river bank, where the John M. Abbott was in waiting to take the excursionists on a moonlight trip up the river. The crowd was either larger than the managers expected, or the number of conveyances less. Not more than half of those who desired to go could secure seats in the buses and carriages. It was a jam, and many concluded to stay behind, and wait for some better opportunity, and spend the evening at Lake Manawa. Instead of starting at 6:30 as announced, it was long after 7 o'clock before the start was had from the hotel. The Fifth regiment band furnished the music. A barge was towed by the steamer and on this a canvas was spread for dancing. It was a merry party which thus started off, and they were not expected to return before midnight.

Boat Houses.
 Omaha and Council Bluffs boat houses are located on "Regatta Place." The friends of these two famous clubs are thinking of getting a harbor, all lots adjoining the boating grounds.

REMARKABLE SURGERY.
A Man Loses One-quarter of His Brain and Still Lives.
 New York Correspondent Cincinnati Enquirer: How much brain a human being can lose and still go on with the ordinary manifestations of intellect and have good masculine action and unimpaired nervous force is a question which has often bothered the physiologists and anatomists. There has been and still is a wide diversity of opinion on the subject. In some instances brain has been removed without any perceptible diminution of any power, and even the loss of a small amount of brain has been known to unbalance the mind, to change the disposition or bring on complete or partial paralysis.
 There is an excellent opportunity for investigating this subject at the Blackwell's Island hospital, and if the patient can only be kept where frequent examinations and tests can be made there may be a considerable gain on the problem. The patient is Robert Corfield, a ship-calker, about thirty years of age. He has been in the hospital about five months, and has been closer to the gates of another world ninety-nine men out of a hundred could without being carried through. He was injured in a quarrel while at work in the shipyard. He was lying on his back by the side of another workman under the hull of a vessel when his companion made a discourteous remark. There was bad blood between the men, and as soon as the words were spoken Corfield rolled over and struck at his companion with a hammer. The blow was returned with interest. Before Corfield could get on his feet the other man had seized an ax, and with a vicious swing brought it down on his head. The ax struck at an angle and glanced off, making a bad wound.
 His assailant was in a mad passion, and the ax gleamed in the sunlight as it again came down by a strong arm and sank into the praetorium of his head. Corfield was found, with the ax in his brain, about fifteen minutes after being struck. He was carried in a boat to the hospital. The hemorrhage was promptly checked. Opium and stimulants were given, but the wound was so extensive that there was no hope of saving the patient's life. There was a steady collapse as the effect of the great shock increased, until at last the attending surgeon discerned the sign of life, called for the dead-box, and the body was removed to the deathhouse. This occurred early in the evening, the following morning the undertaker was called in to remove the body away, and, to his great surprise, found Corfield breathing quietly. Dr. Beard, the house surgeon, came quickly to the spot, and could hardly believe the evidence of his senses.
 Corfield was surely alive. He had run a chance of being buried alive but for the fortunate discovery. Then came the battle to save his life.
 It seemed like a needless waste of skill and time to do anything, but as long as the man was alive the attending surgeon picked up his tools and went to work. The scalp in the neighborhood of the wound was cut into strips, and loosened with a knife and turned away from the bone over a space about six inches square. The condition of the bone was enough to take the heart out of even an over-angry man. But the bone forceps were quickly at work. Chip followed chip, and pieces of the skull were tossed on the floor with the same sort of a twist that a dentist jerks out a tooth.
 The throbbing brain pressed upward when the skull pressure was taken away, and as the surgeon kept on cutting it seemed as if the brain would come through the opening.
 About as much of the bone was taken out as a medium-sized hand would cover. Then the hunter for splinters began. They seemed to be everywhere, and were so many that many times the hunter seemed to be all gone a careful washing would expose more of them in the brain substance. This part of the operation was tedious indeed, and unsatisfactory at the best. The goal in the brain was exposed, that being deemed useless, on the ground that it was not probable that any of the bone had been carried by the sharp point of the ax into the brain any distance from the surface.
 The patient remained in seemingly cataleptic condition day after day until the time lengthened into weeks. There was neither improvement or retrogression apparent. The wound was healthy, but did not heal, and there was a profuse discharge of pus. These conditions were maintained until it became evident there was something foreign in the brain. Dr. Beard decided to reopen the wound and the original line of incision was followed with a knife. Ether was not given, there being no necessity for it. When the brain was opened the outer edge appeared good, but on the inside there had been a complete destruction of tissues. The brain seemed to be decayed. A quantity that did not resist the slightest pull was removed.
 The surgeon was astonished to find, deeply imbedded in the brain, a splinter of bone, the length and thickness of an ax's edge, which had evidently been carried through on the point of the ax. Search was made for other pieces of bone, but none were found. It is estimated that over one-quarter of the brain substance was removed during the operation. After the wound was closed the patient was given stimulants at short intervals.
 It was a long siege, but the patient got beyond the danger line in time. He became conscious after four days and seems to be perfectly intelligent. The only sign of loss of brain appears in the patient's inability to speak, and it is thought that the power to talk will come back. He is slowly recovering strength, and an effort will be made to keep him in the hospital for several years for experimentation.

What a Well Known Restaurant Keeper Says.
 423 BROADWAY, New York, March 12, 1885.
 Some weeks ago I took a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I suffered great pain, considerable fever and worst of all found myself with a racking cough. I tried all the remedies I could get, but Alcock's Porous Plasters, intending to use them on my throat, chest and back. Unfortunately my wife had given all the plasters away, and the consequence was that I spent a sleepless night. Next day I applied an Alcock's Porous Plaster.

The Cause of Cyclones.
 "The Instability of the Atmosphere," by N. S. Shaler, in Scribner's Magazine for August: In cyclones we find the largest manifestation of that energy by which the superheated lower air whirls upward from the earth through openings which it has rent in the higher cooler layers. In its fundamental cause the cyclone is essentially like both the lesser class of whirls, the dust whirls and tornadoes, but the field of its work is vastly greater, though the energy which it exercises at any one point is less. The condition which lead to the formation of a cyclone are as follows: In those heated portions of land and sea where the circumstances permit the air to remain for a long time undisturbed, it becomes very warm and charged with moisture. As the heat becomes the more moisture it contains, and the less it permits the heat radiating from the surface to pass through its texture; at the same time the upper air, deprived of its usual share of radiant heat, becomes abnormally cold; finally, as in the dust-whirls and tornadoes, the lower air breaks through the upper and rushes toward the sky. Although at its beginning the cyclone storm is probably of no greater size and of much less ascending force than a tornado, there are several reasons which makes it different from that of the smaller whirls. In the first place, the field of heated air which causes the cyclone is far more extensive than that which produces the tornado, though at the same time the difference of temperature between the upper and lower air may be less. The great bulk of the lower stratum of hot and moist air permits the cyclone to grow larger, but the less ascensional force of the lower air makes it rather less violent in its movements.
 As soon as the ascending current brings a portion of the heated air from the surface into the higher level it expands and the force, originally in the form of heat, which kept it in the state of vapor, is lost. The pressure in the column just as much as would the direct application of heat sufficient to vaporize the water. Thus we have two sources of force to impel the air in the cyclone upward. Both these forces appear in the tornado, but there the original heat of the lower air is the principal cause of the motion.
