The Brownsville Blow. BROWNSVILLE, Tex., Sept. 24.-It is reported from Point Isabel that two schoon ers broke loose from their moorings during the hurricane and have not since been heard from. Also, a lighthouse tender, with fourteen men, which broke loose Tuesday morning, has not been heard from. A tele-gram from the mayor of Brownsville to the Associated Press says the report of dam-ace by the storm in that city was greatly exaggerated. Very little damage was done.

SPEED THE PARTING GUEST. The Sentiment Expressed by Tom

At the close of Richard III. last night at the Grand opera house, the Elk delegation from Kansas City, with about one hundred and twenty-five others, accompanied Mr. Thomas W. Keene the Barker hotel. The dinroom was spread with beautifully garnished tables, one of which ran along the west side of the apartment. Three others extended from it to the entrance. The columns of the rooms as also the office were gracefully decorated with national colors. Musical Union orchestra which fraternally volunteered its services played the opening march and to its inspiring strains the invited guests took their places at the board. At the table first mentioned sat W. N. Babcock, exalted ruler of the Omaha lodge of Elss. No. 39. On his right sat Milton Nobles, next to him being Mr. Balch, the courteous and generous host of the Barker, who tendered the banquet. On Mr. Babcock's left sat Mr. I. W. Miner, and by his side the guest of the evening, Thomas W.

Around the other tables sat about one hundred and fifty people of the leading professional and mercantile circles. But little time was lost in opening the feast, and when an hour had passed, an exquisite oyster supper had been dis-

The following programme was then

Mr. Keene introduced his remarks by quoting a sentiment from Charlotte Cushman. He then said:
All honor to Charlotte Cushman! Peerless in the guild of our art among our honored countrywomen. My brothers of the Elks. I greet you in loving fraternity. The sentiments just expressed, which you have entwined as a garland about the cup pledged in honor of the drama, are as beautiful as they are suggestive. To the sister arts, poetry, sculpture, painting the world owes its civilization.

The drama is practical poetry. It is the materialism of word painting. The sentiments left to us by our sister come to us as the echoes of the centuries before christianity was even a dream, when Pagan Greece was the echoes of the centuries before christianity was even a dream, when Pagan Greece was a model for the world, from which the expanded world of the present draws its grandest inspirations. In the far away shadow of prehistoric time the drama was the literature of Greece, contemporaneous with sculpture. Poetry and sculpture were co-equal in their birth. Pericles, Euripides and Terence shared public honors. The monumental marbles that crowned the Acropolis are dust and rum but the thought crowded the classic groves of Academus with applauding thousands still lives in the studies of the world; youth of to-day, shadowed only by the grand conceptions of the master, of him who wrote for all times. The splendid achievements of man's hand perish and pass away, but mind is eternal. The drama with us is Shakespeare. Shakespeare is the drama whose lines will live as our language will endure. Universal in their reaching, undying in their wondrous thought and expression, as fresh as they were in the days of old Queen Bess—immortal.

In all ages the drama has been a reflex of immortal.

In all ages the drama has been a reflex of the time. It delified virtue, ennobled intellect, glorified honor, stimulated the humble and showed vice its own enemy. Painting was but a crudity when poetry and the drama were a power. Until the decadence of Greece, and long after kome had become the matters of the world under the Coars. Greece, and long after Rome had become the mistress of the world under the Casars, painting was in its tottering infancy, and so continued until Angelo and Rapnael rose under the fostering patronage of the mighty powers of the church under the pontiffs. They founded that school known as the Old Masters—old to us now in the march of time, but as compared with the drama, young enough in simple parlance, merely to rank as the drama's great great-grand child. Talking, thinking or writting of the drama, Shakespeare rises before the mind's eye always. He is the be-all and the end-all. How endeared to us of every degree, of every clime and nation has he become, We are told that there are spots upon the effulgent How endeared to us of every degree, of every clime and nation has he become. We are told that there are spots upon the effulgent plenty of the sun. The loonoclastic spirit of the age is to drag the image from the niche in the ideal temple where the immortal great are lodged in imperisable glory. Speculation and theory ramble wildly, and may I not say blindly among the mists of doubt striving to rob him of his fame until they are befogged in the ingenious sophistries of a — cipher. A cipher! Playing on the word what is a cipher? Naught! I leave it so, as the bard has said: "What's in a name?" By any other name. Shakspeare would be cherishered as dearly by the world. That drama which was given to us 200 years ago, by the poor glover's son, who ran away from the Warwickshire village for his satire on the 'squire of Chalcote and from his bride in green lanes of Shatting, to find his fate in London, or what was given to us in Shaksperean name—what does it matter. Hamlet and the other inspirations of his pen unequalled since he lived are Shakespeare's still and as Shakesperean they will remain to the cnd, when old Father Time shall roll up his scroll and say "finis."

But I detain you too long. My trade is to love Shakespeare and I love my trade. It has grown with my life. It is the meat I feed on and I thank God I have thriven on it.

At the suggestion of Mr. Miner, three hearty cheers were given for Mr.

At the suggestion of Mr. Miner, three hearty cheers were given for Mr. Keene after the applause which greeted his ad-dress had subsided.

Mr. Keene delivered his address with the energy and earnestness of a man thoroughly imbued with the sentiments and feelings to which he gave expression, and was listened to with intense interest on the part of every one present. Throughout the evening the most generous jovial and fraternal spirit pre-Pleasant bon mots were changed, agreeable conversation indulged, while at times hearty peals of laughter told that somebody had con-tributed to the general fund of merriment by a happy remark or a play of wit. But among the number of merry people, none seemed to enjoy the occasion more than did the genial guest himself. His geniality inspired every person present, and as a consequence the banquet and flow of sentiment closed as an event which will not soon be forgotten. To Mr. Balch, the modest manager of the Barker, to whose liberality the feast was due, belong the kindest wisnes o his appreciative guests.

The marriage ceremony of the Episco-pal church was read by Dean Gardner, the preliminary being pronounced at the entrance to, and the concluding lines within the chancel of the cathedral. The ceremony over, the bridal party retired from the church, the bride and groom attracting the undivided attention of the large gathering, the organ, the while sounding Mendelssohn's wedding march. The reception took place at the residence of Mr. Barber, 2207 Farnam street, where hosts of friends paid their respects to the happy couple. The house was beautifully decorated with fragrant flowers. The presents were many and valuable and filled a number of tables in one of the spacious apartments. The bride and groom left Wednesday night for the east.

A large and fashionable assembly, gathered at the spacious mansion of Mrs. Antonia Hauck, 905 Morrison avenue, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of Thursday, to witness the wedding of the youngest daughter of the house, Miss Harriet Hauck, to Mr. Fred Metz, jr., a young brewer of Omaha, Neb. The ceremony was performed at 2 o'clock by the Rev. Mr. Eberhardt, of the Church of the Holy Ghost, in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the two families. The bridal pair were entirely unattended and stood in the first of a sui te of parlors with a thick background of cocoa palms and evergreens studdied with bright blossoms, and here and there a snow-white dove possed lightly on the branches. A large horseshoe in the center of the room was composed of shaded red and pink roses with the monogram entertwined. Groups of plants wainscoated the handsome apartments on all the lower floor and large baskers of flowers; gifts from numerous friends, filled the air with their perfume. The bride's twin brother, Mr. Harry Hauck, and also her two eldest brothers, Dr. Louis Hauck and Dr. Eugene Hauck, assisted their mother in receiving the guests, who began to arrive at 4 o'clock until 6. A family banquet, served by Tony Faust and Leopold Mohr, followed the wedding ceremony. The guests sat out on the veranda beneath a canopy of evergreens and awning stretched out far into the shrubberies of the grounds. In the evenng this veranda and the lawn were illuminated by myriads of Japanese lanters. From the ball room upstairs floated the soft notes of Baurer's band of music, playing all the latest operatic airs. The bride, a tall Saxton beouty, with nair of burnished gold, wore a long gown of ivory satin, the train sweeping the floor in shing waves and the front gathered in Margurite style with deep cut points over a ruffle of lace. The coress lace fastened by a diamond lace-pin, and the puffed sleeves were gathered at the round white el-bow by a fall of lace met by long white gloves.
