SIOUX CITY, Ia., Oct. 42 .- [Special Telegram to the BEE.]-The business men of this city feel very jubilant over the fact that the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha road has announced a new freight schedule giving Sioux City at least a third lower rate than prevailed a year ago. This is a splen-did recognition of the city's growing im-portance in the business and commercial

Colonel Henderson at Missouri Valley. MISSOURI VALLEY, Ia., Oct. 24 .- [Special Telegram to the BEE]-- The greatest republican demonstration which was perhaps ever witnessed in Harrison county is now progressing here. The magnificent orator and soldier statesman, Colonel D. B. Henderson, of lowa, is now holding spell-bound an immense and enthusiastic audience with his brilliancy and logic. The city is crowded with people who have arrived in various ways from different directions. The city is beautifully lighted by thousands of jets and the American flag adorns the house tops. All sincm and avaitament The ouse is so densely crowded that many have been compelled to retire from the building and resort to restoratives, while the eloquer orator was required to refrain, much to his expressed regret. The arraignment of the democratic party in its administration of national affairs was one of those masterly efforts which hos so distinguished Colonel Henderson on the floors of congress. On the whole it is decidedly the most successful pub lic-expression of admiration ever tende any exponent of popular sentiment which has graced the confines of our municipality

He had his pockets full of the choicest cigars, a dozen books and magazines, and one old granger gave him a new jack-knife with

It was not until 1861, how-ever, that a complete, successful loca-motive was built in Russia. In those the air. At a heighth of 4,500 feet I started to climb into the basket from my trapese, which hung some six feet below. The trapese consists of an iron tube about two feet long, simply susdays the Russian locomotives burned wood altogether. So pleased was the czar at the great work successfully carpended on a rope running through it ried through by the "audacious" Amerand attached above like a swing. The icans that he decorated them with royal asket is not like the co basket in use, but is an invention of Carlotta, who patented it, and consists of a light board platform, one-half inch thick, suspended by hammock netting to the concentrating ring above, and acts very much like an ordinary hammock with a broad board laid in it. Anyone who has ever tumbled out of a ham mock will have an idea of how unsteady ness. it seels, and this disposition to tip is made use of by Carlotta to partly guide the course of the balloon in rising or falling, as the slightest change in the æronant's position alters the instinction of the platform and serves to deviate the balloon's course somewhat, and many of the marvelous flights and descents she has made are due to her skill in managing this "rudder platform" as she calls it. As I started to climb up into this basket my weight tipped the platform downward and thrust the trapeze in the opposite direction so that I then lay upon my back in mid air nearly a mile high, with my feet thrust hard against the trapeze bar, and my hands grasping the hammock netting. If any one will lie on the ground beneath a hammock and grasping a hammock immediately above, and try to climb into it, he can appreciate the situation. only at a mile height distance don "lend enchantment to the view." I had to let go somewhere, and I slipped my feet off the trapeze bar and swung into space, hanging by the hammock netting twine, as a loop of rope, previously ar-ranged, like a stirrup for mounting, had slipped out of reach, and the trapeze now hung on the opposite side of the platform and out of sight and reach. climbed the meshes hand over hand. afraid each mesh would break or my hands give way, through pain from grasping the small cords. Professor Meyer's assistant, occupied the plat-form above me and tried to assist me, but could not render me service, as] was afraid a touch would send me off. and just then I didn't "want the earth, nor have any present use for it. "As I climbed the netting the anchor caught into my gymnast suit and the hooks held me from rising further. There I hung, held by two small cords of hammock twine, my trapeze away from me and out of sight and firmly held from fising by the an-chor hooks. At the risk of breaking the hammock twine, or my hold, I let go one hand and detached the anchor from my jacket and then recommenced to climb, and finally grasped the rim of the basket and next the concentrating ring above and managed to pull myself inside the netting which had beer violently swinging with my efforts all the time. Mr. Casler said I was white, and I know I was in a fever of excitement. I never climbed into a basket from my trapeze before, and I never shall try it again."

sian engineers were frightened out of Thomas Winaus, like his brother their senses. Not one of them could William, had many eccentricities. He constructed many models of steam vesgrasp so great an engineering feat. The obstacles in their way seemed unsursels. He conceived an idea of building a steamer in the shape a cigar which would be remarkable for speed. He mountable. Other foreign engineers would have nothing to do with it. Then the Winans stepped in and offered to take the contract, "Give it to the audacious Americans," said the czar, stipulating a heavy for-feit should they fail to keep the conspent several ordinary fortunes in trying to develop this scheme; but eight-shaped boats proved a failure, and until within a few years ago one of his models, which cost him $50,000, was lying rotting at tract. To work they went, and successhis private wharf on the Upper Patapsco. Tom Winans might have left a million fully constructed the road, which was then considered a great engineering feat. The Winan brothers are said to or so for charities when he died, but very little was given to such worthy ob-jects. His two children, Ross and Celeste, were left the entire fortune. The only sister of William and Thomas Winaus married a Mr. Whistler, a rela-tive of the artist Whistler. Her two daughters were brought up with her brother's children, Ross and Celeste. Opinion by Adams: "The words 'New Era' added to the word 'beer' indicated nothing as to the character of the product. Suppose the plaintiff had tendered for transportation an article denominated simply 'brandy,' would the plaintiff be entitled to maintain its action to receive the article upon an obligation that it was a new kind of brandy which had no intoxicating quality! Both the brothers' had hob-bies. William had a nervous dread of crossing the ocean. He has frequently expressed a desire to visit the home o his boyhood, but whenever speaking of America, he says: "I will never go there until I can cross on a railroad. No ocean steamers for me.

In a letter responding to the invita-tion of an old Baltimore friend to visit him, Mr. Winans wrote:

"I would not cross the ocean for $5,000,000 cash."

The ship the brothers sailed in when they first went to Russia was nearly wrecked, and William over remembered that terrible experience. He still continues to work on models of queer machinery, having a hobby in that line. His income, according to his own returns, is about $3,000,000 a year. Next to the Rothschilds and the duke of Westminster, he is the richest man in England. He is charitable, and spends money lavishly. He has a splendid residence in Konsington gardens, and as an illustration of his eccentricity it may be stated that when he finished his grand hotel he had a $50,000 Axminster carpet made from special designs for the drawing room. When it was laid he was disappointed. It did not meet his idea, so he ordered another from different designs. When the second carpet came the question arose as to what was to be done with the first. Mr. Winans thought for a moment.

The child is said to have contracted the disease from the infected clothing of a new French nurse who had just been employed to attend it. The little one was taken ill out at the country seat of the Winans, a few miles from town. It was brought to the great isolated mansion of Tom Winans on Baltimore street. Here the mother and father left the babe in charge of one of the leading physicians of the city, who gave up his other practice and devoted his whole time and attention to the little sufferer, but was unable to save its life. The parents were not with their child when it died. They avoided the contagion and paid the physician $5,000 to attend it. The new residence of Ross Winans on St. Paul street is a magnificent structure, and equals if not surpasses Robert Garrett's palace on Mount Ver-non place. It is built of brown stone, of gothic architecture, and very unique, but gloomy in appearance.
