lightning dart struck him in the thigh, where he fastened his fangs and in a twinkling threw three coils around the keeper's legs. The head keeper and Harrison dropped their struggle with the anaconda and his foe and came to the relief of Thompson. Terrible Fight Between Snakes.

Philadelphia Telegraph: There was scene of terrible excitement and danger in the snake house at the Zoo this morning, and the twenty-five-foot deer-swallowing anaconda from the wilds of South America, who had just celebrated his semi-centennial, has yielded up the ghost and is no more. The anaconda has been a fellow occupant with two Indian pythons of a twenty-foot cage in the snake house. Being ten feet longer and a little bigger in his whist measure than his associ-ates, who were only fifteen feet long, ten inches in diameter, twenty-five years old and worth $500 apiece, while his age was fifty, his girth forty-eight inches, his weight 125 pounds and his value $800, he was sleepy, vicious and arrogant. Besides that he had an in-dividual bath tub, for he will only kill ond only his for he will only kill and eat his food when in the water. The anaconda did not eat the first year he was at the Zoo, and during the last few months he has taken his meals with provoking irregularity. But yesterday his appetite surged in upon him, and he got away with five ducks, and last night, before the keeper put the cover over his tub, he absorbed two more. The pythons were served with a brace of rabbits and an entree of birds, and were left to their repose by Keeper Thompson. It is the nature of the sleek python to abhor repose so long as he can worry anybody, and, it being the time of festival and patriotic demonstra-tion, he arose-this is metaphor-and went over to the bath tub and shoved the board off the anaconda, and probably did it with a full consciousness of his responsibility. Keeper Thompson was in a back room preparing breakfast for the other snakes who have a more delicate appetite than constrictors, when a peculiar swish and rumble reached his ars. The moment he looked in at the door he was startled by a huge, squirm-ing, hissing ball of snakes rolling around, for the anaconda, resenting the impudence of the python in looking into his private bath, had got out and gone for him, with the logical result of predicting the assent python. There involving the second python. There they were, coiled tightly together in a ball, and squirming over the floor, He called to Head-keeper Byrne, who summoned Keeper Harrison, the Her-cules, who manipulates the grizzlies in the bear pit. Keeper Byrne under-stands the snake nature. He knows that if you want to uncoil him you must take him by the tail and not by the head, because the tail is the most sensitive part of his being. He went into the cage and man-aged to extract one of the pythons from the mass and sling it into a corner. Har-rison then came to his assistance to straighten out the convolutions of the anaconda and the remaining python, who were twisted together like the strands of a rope. This was necessary to save the anaconda, who, although he had ten feet more of length and fifty pounds of weight than his neighbor from India, was yet gradually losing his wind. Besides all that the python had his fangs set firmly in his head.

While thus engaged no attention was paid to the third snake that had been thrown in the corner. Tiring of his in-
