A fine wagon and a sled for the Wells-Fargo Express company were yesterday turned out from the carriage factory of H. F. Hattenhauer, 27-31 Fourth street, The wagon goes to Omaha and the sled farther west. All of the wagons used by this company are manufactured at this factory.

The item in Sunday morning's BEE in relation to the finding of a layer of limestone near Third street should have been credited to Dr. Gordon instead of Dr. Ellis. While the two gentlemen in question might fully agree upon a medical question, their opinions as to a calcareous formation underlying that part of the city are widely at variance.

Tickets for "The Musketeers" were placed on sale at Bushnell's yesterday morning, and were in great demand. The outlook is favorable for a crowded house this evening. This great comic opera will also be presented to-morrow evening, and a matinee at 2 o clock Saturday afternoon. It will be the best entertainment of the kind presented here this season, and should receive the liberal patronage that is justly its due.

The Chinese students will give an entertainment at the Baptist church Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and another in the evening. The ladies of the church will serve a supper between the hours of 5 and 8. These entertainments are first-class, and show many of the strange customs and ceremonies of the old world. There will also be a curio-art department where souvenirs may be obtained. Enjoyment for every-

George Hibbs, the little fellow who accidentally swallowed a picture screw last Thursday, died Sunday evening from the effects of it. He suffered terribly, but bore the pain very patiently, and was conscious until shortly before he died. The funeral will take from the residence of his grandmother, Mrs. Burke, 220 Seventeenth avenue, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The deceased was but little over nine years of age, and was an unusually bright boy and . great favorite among his playmates.

COUNCIL BLUFFS CARPET CO. Two New City Buildings. The city fathers evidently believe in having the city's buildings as handsome and stylish as any private individual's, and the result is shown in the new fire building on Broadway, and the patrol house on Byrant street can not but be satisfactory to them and creditable to the city. The fronts of each are of pressed brick and are very neat and tasty in design. The trimmings are of granite, white at the patrol building, and brown at the fire house. Windows of colored glass in pleasing patterns give a tasty appearance and finish to the whole that is not exceeded by any business house in the city. The interior of these buildings are to be strictly in keeping with the outside. When fully completed they will be unexcelled for comfort and convenience, and a full description of their appointments will be given in the BEE. The work at the patrol house is now sufficiently advanced for the wagon and horses to be kept there and they will be changed to their new quarters to-day. The driver's apartment will be completed and the police alarm moved there from the city jail, about the last of the week. The new extension truck and horses are already stationed in the Broadway building, and the boys are joyfully anticipating a removal from their present uncomfortable quarters in a Pierce street barn to the same place. The Pierce street approach to the new building was graded yesterday, and does away with having to back the truck to its place. All the exterior work is now completed and the state of completion of what now remains to be Better service to the city by its police and fire departments, and a better showing in the outside world, will be the result of the city's liberality in this re-

They Went for Joe. Sunday afternoon the police were notified by the Omaha authorities to look out for Joe Martin, who had stolen $120 in cash and some jewelry from No. 211 Twelfth street, where he was engaged as porter. As the "coppers" had not made an arrest for two days they did look out for him with a vengeance, and found him at the Rock Island depot with a ticket for Des Moines, about to board the train. In answer to Marshal Guanella's inquiries, he said his name was Martin, and he was from Lincoln. He did not want to tell his first name, but finally said it was Joe. "All right; Joe, get off," said he genial guardian of the peace, and the pair proceeded to the police station, where the gentle Joseph icknowledged that he was an ex-porter from Omaha. An officer from that side of the river came over for him yesterday morning and marched him away to the inspiriting strains of "Not for Joe" from "Jerry's" jewsharp.

Tokens of Appreciation. We have 10,000 customers in Council Bluffs, Omaha and vicinity. As a token of appreciation for past patronage we will present them on January 1, 1888, with a beautiful organ, containing two and three-fifth sets of reeds and an elegantly finished case, and nineteen other beautiful gifts. Every customer receives a ticket.

All holiday goods closed out regardless of cost. Prices on all goods reduced until January 1. Mail orders promptly fillied and tickets accompany goods. MUELLER MUSIC CO.

Tried For Selling Arms. The case of the State vs Joseph Riche for selling firearms to miners was tried before Justice Barnett yesterday morning. The evidence showed that the defendant was in the employ of M. A. Pierce, and had been often cautioned against selling arms to boys; that he had, contrary to these instructions, sold revolvers to Frank McKesson, Henry Deetkin, Albert Van Danburg and Clinton White. Practically no defense was made and Riche was fined $25 in each case, $100 in all, which he paid. The case against Pierce was continued for my strength, I succeeded after much thirty days. Upon this showing and the evidence existing, final acquittal is expected. The punishment may fall heavily on Riche, but the violation of law could not be overlooked. If the example made in this instance prevents a repetition by others, the parents of this city will rejoice.

The case of Mitchell vs the estate of W. T. Cullison, which has been on trial during the past ten days, was closed and submitted yesterday afternoon. The court took it under advisement with opportunity for attorneys to present arguments upon any law points involved in which he may be in doubt.

The case of W. T. Cullison, by his heirs, vs Robert Mitchell, the executor, was called late in the afternoon and will consume to-day in its hearing.

A NIGHT HORROR. Frightful Journey Trough the Swamps of Arkansas. Chicago Times: Nita and I crossed the river on a steamboat going to Mound City. We left the boat at Wade's Landing and struck out westward for the Blackfish. The distance from Mound City to Little Rock is about 190 miles, of which more than 125 is through swamps. After leaving Mound City the road as far as the Blackfish was broad, smooth and level, and in no wise indicative of the character of the road yet to be traveled. Half a mile from our starting point the road entered the swamp. Nita's hoof disappeared below the water, and in all that day I did not see them again. It was the wierdest, strangest ride I have ever taken, and many a thousand miles have I covered these many years on horseback and in many climes. Great col-umnar trees grow straight up, shoot-ing ambitiously skyward, seeking the generous sunlight. Shaft after shaft, repeated endlessly as far as the eye could reach, these gray, moss-grown pillars crowded with overhead the great, thick overshadowing arch of foliage shutting out the sunlight. Between them ran interminable corridors filled with strange palpable shadows of wonderful tones; below and everywhere the wild swamp water. Not like other water is this, but alive with a mysterious life of its own. Brown is it everywhere, from the sombre, almost black-brown of the deepest shadow, through every shade of rich, light-bearing gold brown ton glowing, vivid, indescribable, quivering jewel, where a stray sunshaft pierces the solemn aisles like a javelin hurled and stirs the bewitched water to pulsating life. Through the hoary, silent years millions upon millions of brown leaves have come dead rustling, floating down to the arid water below, and beneath its shimmering surface they lie, a soft, rich carpet. Strange forms of life within those waters Great monstrous frogs would lurk. plunge from some green decaying stump that shone like an immense emerald in the dim shadow and with a vigorous, slow stroke swim out of sight. Slim spotted snakes, with bitter, malignant, metallic eyes and strident hiss, slid away into the dense tangled water weeds. Hideous lizards, horrid de-formed monsters, writhed or wriggled their misshapen ugliness through the sullen water, or mayhap of brilliant green or startling vivid crimson, darted away among the long swinging vines. Strange water insects, too, there were. And every tree was covered with huge clumps of moss, and orchids, and strange parasites, and long tangles of gray moss, and long, sinuous vines that swept down, blazing with rare, wiered, brilliant flowers to the weirder water plants below. No bird's clear note cheered these solitudes; no bird was there, save in a ruined tall tree stump, clothed in rich garments of vines and of moss,

there sat a huge horned owl, staring with yellow eyes across the brown deso-lation. And this was the strangest thing; how brown the green of the leaves and even the vivid scarlet of lizard or flowers seemed to be-the very air was golden brown. The wind sobbed and moaned dismally through the twisted sullen trees, the road grew more and more obscure, and at last I halted, with a horrible doubt growing fast into belief in my mind that we had lost the trail. I brought Nita to a halt and anxiously peered into the growing darkness. The wind grew fiercer and blew angrily, great pelting drops of rain began to fall, the thun-der muttered in the distance, and Nita was trembling in every limb, so I pushed forward in what I judged to be the right direction, cursing my folly at not having taken the good counsel profferred me. Nearer and nearer came the storm. At length I found myself on the brink of a pool larger, blacker, more hideous than any I had seen. Low, straggling trees surrounded it, with gnarled roots high in the air, like writhing water serpents, and lank boughs outstretched. After a moment's hesitation Nita ventured in. Deep sank her hoofs in the hideous mud, and the black, foul water crept up her sides. Suddenly there was a scream in the air, a wild rush of the mad wind, an intense blinding glare, the awful report of some huge trees near by stricken by the firey lightning. Nita fairly shricked in her terror, plunged wildly, losing her foot-ing, and flung me from her back. I struck against the limbs of a low tree and grasped it instinctly, and looked around quickly for Nita. She was gone. I stood there in that hideous pool, trying to realize my position. Then I thought I would work my way to the tree and climb into the branches and whistle Nita to me when the fury of the storm should pass. What was my hor-ror when I found my feet firmly fixed in the slimy, tenacious mud. throw my arms over the low bough I held, and I did so, putting forth my every exertion in a vain endeavor to free myself. Meanwhile the storm was raging in all its fury. The wind howled and shricked through the trees as though a million demons were let loose, the thunder crashed unceasingly, and the lightning in awful flashes ever and anon lit up the dark-ness. The rain fell in torrents and drenched to the skin. I gave myself up for lost unless the storm should soon pass, when, if I could till then hold on,

I might get Nita back, and holding fast to her, be drawn from the quagmire in which I stood. That I might husband effort in loosening from my waist a broad leather belt, and, passing it under my arms, lashed myself thereby to the limb to which I clung. The hours passed, and yet the storm seemed but to increase in fury.

Suddenly I realized that I was sinking deeper in the water, and yet that was impossible, lashed as I was to the stout limb. Soon I understood my awful position. The water was rising! The realization of the awful doom that threatened me chilled my heart's blood. Cold beads of perspiration broke out upon my clammy forehead, and I shricked aloud in agony. Slowly I could shrieked aloud in agony. Slowly I could feel the water creeping upward. Fran-tically I struggled to free myself from the close-clinging mud that held my feet and legs as if in a vise. Fortun-ately it was that I had lashed myself fast, for at length I must have fainted. How long I lay, or rather hung, there unconscious I do not know, but hours must have passed for the storm had ceased, great murky, ragged clouds were flying across the angry sky, and the water—I gasped in horror; it was at my breast, and rising visibly now. The slow hours wore by, and the sullen water crept ever up, greedy, hideous, And a stolid calm came over me, and all umindful of the growing light that heralded the birth of a new day, I kept a dull gaze upon the rise of the water as it crept from thread to thread on my garments. It reached my neck, and before my strained, blood-shot eyes it quivered and shone like a resistless sea of steel. Higher, higher, and a last despairing shrick burst from my lips. Hark! What was that? And the water approaches my lips! Another shriek! And—an answer! A horse's whinny— "Hole on dar, boss, I'se coming!" A vision of a great negro on Nita's back, and again I lost conscious-

When I again awoke I was in a comfartable bed in Des Arc, weak from the long delirium and fever that followed that night of horror. It seems that Nita, once free, galloped back to Cache river, there to meet the negro who had been sent after me by my auxious host of the afternoon. Thanks to Nita's fidelity and the negro's knowledge of the swamps, I live to-day to tell the
