waiting. From his exposure Glassbrook had suffered considerably, and was in quite an exhausted condition.

Fortunately for Glassbrook, the wind did not change while he was there, for when it blows up the river it is impossible to see the rocks upon which he had landed, and had such been the case he would in all probability have died from suffocation by the spray.

Mr. Barlow, who was engaged in collecting geographical specimens, and had just heard Glassbrook's cries, obtaining some ropes and a steel drill from the supply shed beneath the bank, they clamored over the rocks as near as possible to Glassbrook.
