The board of county supervisors extend a cordial invitation to everybody to attend the dedicatory exercises at the new court house commencing at 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, March 7, 1888. The address will close at 10 o'clock to allow visitors to return home on the evening trains.

M. T. Hardin, superintendent of the pen, has already moved into his office in the new court house. Mr. Hardin lays claim to being the "oldest inhabitant" and it is fitting that he should be the first county officer to take up his official abode in this court house that is justly claimed to be the finest in the state.

The grand jury will renew their labors this morning. The last indictment was against John Francis, larceny from a building in the night time; C. F. Mead, larceny of an overcoat from the Bloomer school house; James Burns, larceny of an overcoat from the Emmett house. These parties are at present confined in the county jail.

Almoses, Allen & Bell have nearly completed the plans for Dr. Macral's five new flats. They will be erected the coming season at the corner of Fifth and Eighth streets. The place will be called Charlotte terrace. There will be a small park in the rear in which will be a beautiful fountain. The buildings will be of brick, finished in red cypress, and will be supplied with all the modern conveniences. It is the intention to begin building operations as soon as the weather is favorable.

At their recent meeting the school board adopted a resolution in view of the probable large increase of population in the western part of the city, and the probable necessity of the erection of one or more large buildings in the vicinity in the near future, the board deems it inexpedient to now build an addition to the Strevensville school house, but that the committee on grounds, buildings and repairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making temporary provision for any needed increase of school facilities in that vicinity.

The "Skule" Still in Session. The success of the "Old Destrisk Skule" entertainment here caused so many inquiries to come in for particulars, churches at other places desiring to get up a similar entertainment, that a pamphlet was prepared giving this information. Hardly a day passes without bringing in several orders and these are scattered from New York to San Francisco. Mr. J. E. Harkness, who has charge of the distributing of these pamphlets, is receiving many words of congratulation on the success of the entertainment wherever given. The following is a sample portion of one of these many letters. It is from Virginia, Ill.: Our entertainment is set for the 26th of February. If it will trouble you would be glad to mail you our home paper, with programme, but do not wish to take your time. With many thanks for your kind letter, and congratulations on the success of the entertainment, I am, respectfully,

SUNDAY IN COUNCIL BLUFFS.

A Quaker Preacher Adding to the Successful Revival.

SOME OTHER POINTS OF PIETY.

The Sensational Experience of a Telephone Operator—Details of Mrs. McMahon's Death—The Need of Street Cleaning.

An Earnest Quakeress.

The Broad Methodist church was filled yesterday morning with an audience anxious to hear the celebrated Quaker evangelist, Mrs. Frame.

For the past few days this lady has been assisting in the series of revival meetings that was begun at this church several weeks ago. During the short time that she has been here she has created a vast amount of enthusiasm, and the church is crowded at every meeting.

At yesterday morning's service she took as her text James 1:13: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Said the speaker: "Everything in this world that is worth having is born of sorrow and toil, and the more it is worth the greater the sorrow and toil necessary to obtain it. It is of those engaged in the pursuit of earthly pleasures that the text speaks—'Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.' The world says blessed is the man that has riches, power, influence, health, position, and other things of worldly honor. Not so the text. Some say 'I never want to desire to dance, and I don't see how any one can give himself up to such pleasure.' If that is the case you will never be rewarded for not being a dancer. If you have never been tempted to drink you will never be rewarded for not becoming a drunkard. If there is no attraction for you in cards, there is no reward for you in not being a gambler. If you have been tempted, and surmounted it, you will receive your reward. 'Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.' None will be rewarded but those who have been tempted and have overcome it. We need not fear that the temptation will hurt us—being tempted is not sinning. Temptation is an enticement to evil, either with or without a desire to yield. In either case we will be rewarded if we overcome the inducement to give way to sin. We do not know how much dross there is until the fire begins to burn. We need not fear that it will hurt the gold, for it will make it shine the greater.

A great many want to reap the reward without the trial. They want to become rich without the labor. They want to be learned, and if a few peeps into a scientific book would make them so, they would succeed very rapidly, but they cannot endure a long course of study. They want to begin where their parents left off. They do not want to begin at the bottom and face the cares, troubles and vicissitudes of life, but in that way only can they obtain the reward. 'Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.' If you have money, a fine home and plenty of friendly acquaintances, you think you know your friends. It is a sad mistake. Wait until your wealth is gone, then you will find out your true and tried friends. Among them all, there is none like your mother.

Young ladies, don't forget your mother. Young gentlemen, don't get too old to kiss your mother good night. Don't wait until those hands are folded and you stand by her grave before you show your appreciation and love. Show your love in life, and not in sprinkling flowers over her grave. There is a vast difference between being saved and being rewarded. Some will barely be saved, and others will be rewarded. It isn't the place in which we are put, but the faithfulness with which we fill it. I have been engaged in this work of saving souls for the past seventeen years, and thousands have come forward at our meetings, and I would not change places with the queen of England to-day. It is sweeter to me to hear a brother say, 'Sister, you have led my child to Christ,' than any other pleasure that could be bestowed upon me. If we all place faithfully and endure all our temptations, we know that we are among those who have been declared blessed.

After the conclusion of the services, the church members and all the new converts took part in a conference meeting around the altar. While the meetings have been in progress a great many new converts have made professions of faith, and the result has been so much more successful than was expected that the meetings have already been continued two weeks longer than was at first intended. They will be held throughout the present week. The attendance is constantly increasing, and there is a prospect of even better results than have yet been secured.

The Humanity of Christ.

At the Congregational church yesterday morning Rev. G. W. Crofts preached an excellent sermon on "The Humanity of Christ." In his introduction he spoke of the incarnation as a mystery, to explain which or understand which was a hopeless task for any human mind. Because it could not be understood was not, however, any reason why its truth should be denied. It was wonderful how man could put thoughts into sound, into letters upon paper, or into signs. The sounds given forth by a speaker were not thoughts, and yet the speaker put into these sounds thoughts which stirred the heart. The letters on the written or printed page were not thoughts, and yet they were put into them, so that in the reading of them the cheek was made to turn pale, the eye to glisten, the whole nature stirred to grand deeds, moved upward toward God or dragged downward. It was a wonderful mystery; still, there was no mystery about it, but that it was done right along. Wonderful it was that man could put thoughts into mere sounds or into letters or signs; it seemed no stranger that God should express his divinity in the human form. It was no more unnatural or strange that God could be put into human form than that thought could be put into words.

The purposes of Christ's humanity were then suggested. One of these was to present a perfect specimen of manhood. Whatever opinion might be held in regard to Christ's divinity, it must be conceded, and generally was, that he was perfect as a man. It was difficult to see how anyone thus acknowledging that Christ was a perfect man could consistently deny that such a perfect man must be of divine origin. The purpose of such a perfect man was to elevate humanity into a higher, and purser life. He was a manifestation of divine love. He was pure, and thus helped fallen humanity by a faultless example. He offered needed consolation for the troubles of the world, and was glad to sustain those who struggled. Man needed such a manifestation of God's love, needed a pure example, needed consolation, sympathy and assistance. God saw all these needs, and sent his Son, Jesus Christ, into this world.

Mrs. McMahon's Death.

The death of Mrs. McMahon, following so soon upon the death of her son, who was for a time assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, has caused much sad interest to be taken in the matter. The details of Mrs. McMahon's death are given by a Tabor correspondent as follows:

The chapter of distressing and sorrowful accidents that record in the daily papers can have no more awful death than befell Mrs. McMahon, a highly respected widow lady about fifty-five years of age, residing at Tabor. Since the death of a dearly loved son who was killed this winter in Colorado, on a train of which he was conductor, it was feared by her family and physician that her grief had caused insanity, and she seemed very despondent. On last Friday night Mrs. McMahon, her daughter Miss Edna, and Miss Dryden, a college student boarder, retired as usual for the night. It is said that the old lady was heard moving about in her room during the night, but no one was disturbed. She was not seen until early this morning, when she was found in her sleeping apartment. It was found that she had been given and soon the whole town, citizens, college students and public school pupils were searching through the town and outlying vicinities. It was thought that possibly in her bewilderment she had started for Hillsdale to take the train, as she often expressed a desire to visit their children living in various parts of the state. A search was made on Saturday morning was spent in the anxious, exciting search, and it was not until nearly noon that someone looking into the hotel nearly directly opposite her room, mistakable evidence of her dreadful fate. It was an excited, horrified throng of neighbors that gathered around to assist in lifting out the body of a beloved one. Her hands, feet and neck were wrapped in ropes and windlass were brought and George Ledgeway and George Starrett were lowered into the well. Her body was raised to the surface and slowly and gently she was drawn back into God's sweet sunlight. She was immediately removed to her residence where loving hands prepared for her a greater early telegram had been sent to her son, George McMahon, of Council Bluffs, who arrived during the forenoon, and he, with the assistance of Mr. P. W. Cook, removed the Hillsdale in the afternoon to be sent to the family cemetery in Pottawattamie county for burial.

Clean the Streets.

Several of the prominent citizens of this city were sunning themselves yesterday afternoon in front of the Pacific house when one of them delivered himself as follows: "Gentlemen, we say we have a nice city—wealthy, pretty and not badly in debt—and so we have. We are pleased with our homes, and are not ashamed to say so. Now, we all belong here, and there is no one of us that represents anything. I just want to represent it to any man, rich or poor, high or low, if the condition of these streets isn't enough to make angels weep. They surely would, if not worse. As you all know, $60,000 was expended last year for paving, and what is the result? The newly-paved streets are in a worse condition than before. What is the reason? The paving is all that could be desired in that line, but the strings of dirt wagons that daily pass over them, leaving great tracks and ruts. I pay my taxes and don't complain about anything within the bounds of reason, but I live on Mynder street, and my assessment for paving that handsome avenue amounted to considerable. In order to get here, I had to waded through mud nearly to my ankles. Have I reason to complain? I tell you, gentlemen, this thing has gone far enough, and something must be done. I shall see the members of the council, and if they can't grant relief, I will see the board of public works, and if they won't, I will see the men who will make a better showing in the aldermanic chairs."

Too Much Lightning.

Miss Sled, one of the operators in the telephone exchange, met with a rather unpleasant experience Saturday evening. During the storm one of the electric light wires became loosened from its fastenings and fell upon the telephone wires. The rain had rendered the insulation imperfect, and the lady received a shock that "made her see stars," to say the least. The current caused nearly every drop to fall, and had it not been for numerous ground wires that allowed much of the electric fluid to escape, Miss Sled would undoubtedly have been killed. The opening of the circuit caused the light to flash and go out, and several places were left in darkness. The trouble was soon remedied and the current turned on again. It was a narrow escape for the operator and she has not fully recovered from the effects of it. This is the first time that first time that the electric light wires have been crossed with the telephone wires and caused a scare in the exchange. Some steps should be taken to prevent the possibility of these wires becoming crossed, as the electric light current is so powerful that serious results are likely to follow.

A Cool Hobby.

Late Saturday night Officer Boswick found a man wandering about the North-western depot. He was covered with mud and his face was discolored and swollen from a heavy blow under the eye. When taken to the police station he said that he came in on the Milwaukee through freight. He gave his name as Charles Usher, of Cedar Rapids. He said that he left home for Fort-mouth to buy a farm, and had two drafts for $500 each on the City National bank of Cedar Rapids. The train did not stop at Portsmouth, and he was brought to Neola, and concluded to come on to the Bluffs and stay over night. After he alighted from the car in the Milwaukee yards he had gone but a few rods when he was knocked down and robbed of all he had. He was completely dazed by the blow and wandered around until found as stated. He had the police telegraph to stop payment on the drafts, and remained at the station the greater part of the day. He also lost his money and a silver watch. He is of the opinion that the brakemen of the train were his assailants, but could give no description of them. The police believe his story and are on the lookout for the perpetrators of the bold scheme. They think that the drafts will be thrown away, and thus the efforts for the apprehension of Usher have been frustrated, but was far from being fatigued. He tells a very straight story, and leaves but little room for doubt.

This is the first occurrence of this kind that has happened here for some time. The parties evidently intended to succeed in their attempt. Usher's face gives evidence of a terrific blow. He states that there were three of them, but can give no further information. The highwaymen will probably not have a chance to prosecute his pugilistic assailant in the courts.

A New Church Organ.

The committee to whom was delegated the placing of the order for the organ for St. Francis Xavier's church have done so. The instrument will be manufactured by J. Gratian, of Alton, Ill., who also put up that of St. Paul's church. This one will be a model instrument, combining every modern attachment. It will contain two banks of keys, two sets of pedals, 10,000 pipes and cost $3,000. The instrument will be completed as soon as is consistent with good workmanship and will doubtless be a credit to the maker and a prize to the church.

The Broadway Bridge.

The river at the foot of Broadway presents a busy scene nowadays. Gangs of men are at work driving piles, grading the approaches, sinking piers, and unloading coars, of which there is quite a train, and the iron work for the superstructure is arriving in large quantities. Another gang is at work on the ice in the center of the river on a large caisson, which is now ready to be filled and sunk. Still another gang is sinking piers on the Omaha side. The whole work is being pushed rapidly.

Bull Fighting in Mexico.

A correspondent writes to the Chicago Tribune from Mexico: Outside in their dark pens the bulls are shut up awaiting their turn to be precipitated into the bright arena, to give thirty minutes of their lives to mortal combat in an encounter where the chances of escape or revenge have been scientifically reduced to a minimum. No torero desires to fight a bull the second time, for a bull that having had experience is a dangerous animal, and will follow up his attacks, and almost surely kill or gore his antagonist.

There is a great silence all over the vast amphitheatre, people holding their breath, the bull is coming through a gate in that bright arena, to the door which will open and admit him to the scene of carnage. His dull roaring is heard as he is gored on toward the door. Then the door opens, and you might hear the fall of a cumbria hand-kerchief so profound is the silence. Ladies' cheeks are pale, and even men's faces have become fixed and rigid. The tensions are tremendous. The bull enters the arena with a savage bound, and for a moment is stunned by the shouts, cries and yells, and he is seized by the bright sunshine. He stops a moment and is a study of animal bewilderment, mingled with rage. On his shoulders was placed, as he entered the "mona," which, at the outset, decorates each bull. This bull, however, has a decoration of broad ribbons of the colors of Mexico and Spain—yellow, red, white and green—and all covered with golden spangles, and sitting in the midst of the tangled ribbons, as in a nest, a stuffed bird of brilliant plumage. The Spanish ribbons bear in gold letters the motto, "Viva Mexico," and the Mexican ribbons, "Viva Espana." Respetado is a tremendous bull, brought, as were all the rest of his taurine companions, from Spain, each one carrying with him, in gold, $1,000 in gold. His horns are big and sharp, and he paws the ground in a tremendous rage. Soon he discerns a picador, and makes a mad rush at man and horse, but the picador, poising his lance and bracing himself in his high-backed saddle, receives the bull's charge most valiantly, and inserting the point of his lance between the bull's shoulders, keeps off. It was a tremendous charge well met, and elicits thunders of applause. The crowd roars, then direct the bull's attention with their flaming capes of red and yellow, and off he dashes after them, some just saving themselves by vaulting the barrier into the narrow space mentioned, which winds around the ring. The bull charges another and another, and kept striking. There are other charges and other rebores till this act is over. Then out go the picadores on their horses, and in come the banderillas with the banderillas in their hands, each man carrying two. These are shot the sticks covered with ribbons and colored paper, and barbed with steel in such a manner that when stuck into the bull's shoulder, they stay placed, unless shaken out by a great effort on the part of the beast. The great feat is the sole object of this part of the fight, is that the banderillo shall place his darts in a space not bigger than a dinner-plate between the bull's shoulders; and, in order that the bull may have fair play, he performs his feat with his arms at the right moment between the bull's horns, while facing the animal, and stick the barbs deep into the shoulders. The bull must not be approached from behind or from either side; it must be a fair face-to-face encounter. This requires nerve, quickness, and precision of eye is to be imagined. How would you like to be standing in front of a bull whose horns are perhaps reddened with the blood of horses, his head lowered to catch you, and when you have under your feet 10,000 feet of space between his horns and plunge firmly into his shoulders the darts you carry in either hand? And, as you do this, you must skillfully turn to one side and just avoid the horn of the bull as he advances. This is a wonderful exhibition, and never fails to bring applause.

Fort Keogh, in Montana, must be a nice sort of a place to live. Last summer the mercury went up to 130° above zero, and here a few days ago the thermometer registered 65 below zero.
