

BOUND OVER WITHOUT BAIL.

Ryan Held For Murder in the First Degree.

THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

But Little New Evidence Adduced as to the Killing of Mrs. Howard—Story of the Prisoner.

Mrs. Howard's Slayer Held.

The police magistrate has indorsed the decision of the coroner's jury, and Frank B. Ryan, the slayer of Mrs. Howard, has been remanded back into custody without bail to answer before the district court to the charge of murder in the first degree.

Ryan was brought in at 5 o'clock and appeared to have recovered from his recent nervous attack, but despite the unusual self-control he exercised over himself, marks of excitement were plainly visible on his countenance.

Attorneys Simeral and Cannon appeared for the state and Attorney Bradley for the defense. The testimony produced was in the main a repetition of that brought out by the coroner's investigation, but the utmost silence prevailed and the closest attention was given throughout the entire trial.

When Mrs. Scott, the aged mother of the slain woman, took her place upon the stand she first turned and gazed at Ryan with a reproachful and almost angry expression.

An Emuette in Roumelia. LONDON, March 6.—Advices received here state that an emuette occurred in eastern Roumelia and that forty officers had been arrested on the charge of high treason.

Articles of Incorporation. The Bank of Valley filed articles of incorporation with the county clerk yesterday.

Luther S. Cushing. Mr. Luther S. Cushing is again in the city in the interest of the trustees and individuals whose funds he has so largely placed in Omaha and Kansas City mortgages, he having negotiated in the past year some of the largest loans in these cities.

Licensed to Wed. The following marriage licenses were issued yesterday by Judge Shields:

Everything which belongs to pure, healthy blood is imparted by Hood's Sarsaparilla. A trial will convince you of its merits.

Parties owning valuable dogs should take out their licenses before next Saturday, the time prescribed by the chief of police. After that day a few of the countless swarms of worthless curs that infest the city stand a good chance of reaching the bottom of the Missouri.

Sickness comes uninvited, and strong men and women are forced to employ means to restore their health and strength. The most successful of all known remedies for weakness, the origin of all disease is Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier.

Instructions were received from Washington yesterday by Chief Clerk Griffin of the railway mail service, to establish at once the service of the Kansas City & Omaha railroad between McCook Junction and Albia. W. J. Gillespie, of Superior, will be the clerk.

A Reprieve for the Condemned. Wretched men and women long condemned to suffer the tortures of dyspepsia, are filled with new hopes after a few doses of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This budding hope blossoms into the fruition of certainty, if the Bitters is persisted in. It brings a reprieve to all dyspepsies who seek its aid.

Burned to Death. CAYUGA, Ont., March 6.—John Daley's dwelling burned early this morning and his wife and two children perished.

LOBBYISTS IN COURT.

New York, March 6.—[Special Telegram to the Bee.]—The general term of the supreme court just handed down a decision reversing the judgment of $5,000 recovered by Cary and Wells against the Western Union telegraph company.

The suit has features which are both novel and interesting. The plaintiffs were employed by the Western Union company to use their influence in securing the passage of a law by the legislature relieving the company from certain taxation claimed to be inequitable and unjust.

Under the law of 1880 the Western Union company were liable for taxes amounting to $140,000 per annum. Judgments for that amount were secured against the company by the city. Cary and Wells used their influence in procuring a repeal of the law.

For their services they charged the company $5,000. The company thought the charge exorbitant, and refused to pay. The plaintiffs declined to reduce the bill, and brought suit for the amount charged. The company was willing to allow $500 a day, but the plaintiffs were unwilling to accept. The suit was referred to Stephen H. Nash as referee.

He found for the plaintiffs, and awarded the full amount of the claim, interests and costs. The defendants appealed to the general term, setting up the defense made before the referee, viz: the plaintiffs' agreement to reduce the amount of the claim, interests and costs.

The general term, reversing the judgment of Referee Nash. In a very scathing document he says the contract is similar to that of a gambler's game, and that the plaintiff's use of the law to deprive the state of its revenues by soliciting assistance of members of the legislature, was turned against them by the defendants, and that the whole contract is void in law as against public policy and public morality.

The Cattle Plague. NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., March 6.—Owing to the pleuro pneumonia which has again broken out among the cattle in Middlesex county, thirty-two head were killed yesterday near South Amboy. Other herds are affected and will have to be slaughtered.

Mr. Ingalls having called Platte to the chair proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

INGALLS CROWS ELOQUENT.

His Reply to Vest's Speech on the Dependent Pension Bill.

THE EXECUTIVE SESSION RULE.

Bill Introduced in the House to Prevent the Use of Likenesses For Advertising Purposes—Congressional Doings.

Senators.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The rule as to executive sessions was modified so as to read: "When a treaty shall be laid before the senate for ratification it shall be read the first time; and no motion in relation thereto shall be referred to a committee to print in confidence for the use of the senate, to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session."

The senate then resumed consideration of the pension bill, the question being on Mr. Wilson's amendment. After a brief debate, Mr. Sherman, referring to Mr. Beck's speech of last week, had read a paragraph in which he (Sherman) had been severely criticized for his connection with silver demagoguery. He would not have regarded it worthy of notice, because the senator from Kentucky had been under excitement, but that he had used the word "secretly"—that it was done under cover—that he (Sherman) was responsible. He proceeded to show how the principle of the report was contained in the bill three years before it went into effect; how it had been discussed, etc. He wanted to know why such a matter had been begged into a debate with which it had nothing to do.

Mr. Beck asserted he would to-morrow prove all his statements. Mr. Ingalls having called Platte to the chair proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity.

He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

He regretted that the senator from Missouri was not in his seat to-day. He should imitate that senator's bad example and would confine himself, so far as he was concerned, to that senator's biography. That senator was born in a state that had not succeeded—Kentucky—and had represented in the confederate congress a state which had not succeeded—Missouri.

Mr. Ingalls then proceeded to address the session, the galleries being crowded to their full capacity. He had been surprised one day last week on returning to the chamber after a brief absence to learn that the senator from Missouri (Vest) had referred to him in terms not complimentary, and had coupled with personal remarks an intimation that the people of Columbia were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the veterans of the republic were a mob of sordid plunderers.

As to himself, he would say that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland had made the pretensions of any American citizen to the presidency respectable. There was no man in this country whose ignorance was so profound, whose obscurity so impenetrable, whose antecedents were so degraded, that he had not the right to aspire to the presidential nomination by the democratic party.

AT AN END AND DOES ANY ONE REGRET IT? PANTALOONS.

We can truthfully say we do not, as our stock of winter material has about exhausted, and now with our new styles in spring materials arriving so rapidly by incoming express, that we must have room. IF ANY MAN can use heavy weight goods he can procure them AT HIS OWN PRICE FROM US.

We shall henceforth, until another blizzard season next year, make its appearance, be happy to spend our time in furnishing better goods for less money than we ever exerted ourselves in offering. We can now show in the choicest spring styles in Table with columns AT, FOR, and descriptions of pantaloons. Includes items like 'AT 2.45 That was made to order' and 'AT 2.75 Which was made to order'.

IN FULL SPRING SUITS. OVERCOATS.

We can show the greatest bargains in medium and light weight OVERCOATS That was ever bought with man's hard earned dollars.

Table with columns AT, FOR, and descriptions of overcoats. Includes items like 'AT 7.40 Which was made to order' and 'AT 8.20 Which was made to order'.

And many others as equally large a bargain in proportion. We shall endeavor to make the grandest effort of our existence in Omaha during the year of 1888, to show in Gent's Furnishings the most complete ever shown west of New York city and at prices which will always bring people to from Virginia had stated that all the colored people who used to vote in the republican ticket now voted the democratic ticket. Was that the reason the democratic majority in Virginia had fallen off from 50,000 to nothing, and the republican majority had only one or two members in the house from Virginia, while the republicans had six or seven? If the democratic party had ever contributed anything to the emancipation of the colored people, it was on the principle of a kicking gun killing the things behind it instead of what it shot at.

THE MISFIT PARLORS 1119 Farnam Street, Omaha. N. B.—Orders by mail receive prompt and careful attention, when addressed THE MISFIT PARLORS, 1119 Farnam Street.

Mr. Boutelle said the gentleman from Virginia had gone out of the course of his remarks in order to cast a reflection upon the sincerity and earnestness of Abraham Lincoln in the performance of the most important act of his life. When he (Boutelle) suggested that the gentleman was not so situated as to be well informed on the point the gentleman had been very much excited and talked about bravery and cowardice. It required a very peculiar kind of bravery in any man to stand up before the American people and attempt to pluck from the brow of the martyred Lincoln so much as one single withered laurel leaf, placed there by the common consent of the civilized world.

After further debate of a political nature, the minority resolution securing Mr. Boutelle's seat was rejected—yeas, 22; nays, 144—and the majority resolution, declaring the sitting member entitled to his seat, adopted without division. The house adjourned.

Rank, Rotten, Reeking. NEW YORK, March 6.—[Special Telegram to the Bee.]—Sardou's "La Tosca" which Fanny Davenport produced the other evening, meets the general condemnation of critics and theater-goers for its coarse sensuality and repulsiveness. Speculation to-day is rife whether Anthony Comstock will not speedily move to abate it. The prevailing sentiment is one of wonder that even La Tosca could tolerate it. It is the talk of the town, but the talk everywhere is the reverse of complimentary. The world interviewed many leading citizens who attended the first performances and the verdict was practically unanimous. Colonel Ingersoll alone was charitable enough to say he "hoped it wouldn't do anybody any harm." One journalist proclaims it "rank, rotten, reeking." It is expected that few ladies will go to see it hereafter.

Fatal Wreck on the Santa Fe. TRINIDAD, Colo., March 6.—[Special Telegram to the Bee.]—A fatal accident occurred at 4 o'clock this morning at Holme, a station eight miles east of here, by the wrecking of the west-bound Atlantic and Pacific express on the Santa Fe railway, in which Leroy Mote, a brakeman, lost his life and one or two others were badly bruised. The train was running at a high rate of speed when the rear car, in which Mote was riding, was derailed. The unfortunate man was thrown into the corner of the car, a heavy steel falling upon his head, crushing it into a jelly. His car was badly damaged. The remains were taken to La Junta, where he has a wife and child.

Attempted Bank Robbery. PITTSBURGH, March 6.—The Chronicle-Telegraph special from Bradford, Pa., says a desperate attempt was made to rob the Bradford National bank shortly before noon to-day. At that time there was no one in the bank but the cashier, Harvey Tomblin. Hearing a noise, he turned and discovered a young man behind the counter, just as the latter grabbed a large bundle of bank notes. Tomblin seized the robber, and in the struggle which ensued the thief shot Tomblin fatally. He then took the money and started out, but the report of the pistol had already attracted a crowd, and the robber, seeing that escape was impossible, shot himself in the head, fatally injuring himself.

Suicide of a Banker. CINCINNATI, March 6.—Hornum Abbee, aged twenty-seven, junior partner of E. H. Abbee & Co., wealthy bankers of Bremen, Germany, was found dead in his room this morning, having shot himself in the mouth with a revolver. He had been in America about a year. In St. Paul, Minn., he fell in love with a Mrs. Pattison, whose husband is living. A divorce was applied for and denied. It is thought this fact caused the suicide.

Fatal Wreck. PITTSBURGH, March 6.—A freight train ran into the rear of an empty accommodation train near Johnstown, Pa., on the Pennsylvania road early this morning, and both trains were wrecked. The conductor was killed and two others fatally injured.

Advertisement for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, featuring a bottle illustration and text describing its benefits for various ailments.

Advertisement for Kirk's White Cloud Floating Soap, featuring an illustration of a Native American man on a horse and the text 'There is no success like success.'

Advertisement for James S. Kirk & Co's White Cloud Floating Soap, highlighting its quality and availability.

Advertisement for The Chief, a publication or product, with a large stylized title and descriptive text.

Advertisement for London Granules, a medicinal product, with detailed text about its efficacy and manufacturer.