County Recorder Thomas had approved more plats than any of his predecessors. Seventeen plats have been filed in his office during the past year. This is but one of the numerous results of the revival of real estate.

On account of the defacement of the government building by soft coal smoke the officials have ordered that an iron smoke stack be constructed of sufficient height to carry the obnoxious smoke and soot above the building.

There was no meeting of the city council last evening, an adjournment being taken until Friday evening. The new councilmen must qualify before the 14th inst., but they do not take their seats until the first meeting next week.

The decision of Judge Aylesworth in the Fairmount park case will not be rendered until to-morrow, owing to the absence of Mr. Haldane, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, in Lincoin, where he is at present employed in the case of David Bradley & Co. vs Bagley.

The request has come from promi-nents and musical lovers of Des Moines for the St. Cecelia Ladies' quartette, of this city, to repeat there the entertainment recently given in the Congrega-tional church here. If arrangements can be made the request will probably be complied with.

The collection at Broadway Methodist church last Sunday morning was a most munificent gift to the cause which the Freedman's Aid society represents. The amount of the collection was $276, and this amount was materially swelled by the evening collection.

This evening the young folks of the Congregational church give an orange social at the residence of Mrs. J. F. Evans. Orange is to be the prevailing color of the decorations, and will also be prominent in the refreshments. A short musical and literary programme has also been arranged.

SCHOOL ELECTION RESULTS.

The Democratic Candidates Elected-A New $40,000 Building Voted-Suicide of a Fallen Girl-No Council Meeting.

From Shame to Suicide.

Another of earth's frail unfortunates. tired of the scenes of a cold and unfeeling world, in a moment of frenzy and despair yesterday, took a dose of deadly poison, and by her own hand ended a life of shame. About noon a man appeared on the streets, and was anxiously inquiring for the coroner. Inquiry soon revealed the fact that one of the inmates of Belle Clover's house of prostitution, at 800 Broadway, had committed suicide by taking poison, and was then lying dead at the above named place. The coroner was absent at Crescent City, and in response to a tele-gram sent word that he would be home about 6 o'clock. A BEE reporter visited the scene of the tragedy, and interviewed several of the inmates as well as the landlady concerning the shocking deed. The information elicited from the landlady enshrouded the affair in a mystery. She said that the dead girl came to her house a week ago from Sioux City in commany, with another Sioux City in company with another girl who was there in the house, and who had been there before on several occasions. The dew comer, whose name occasions. The dew comer, whose name was Maud Clark, was a total stranger to her, but appeared very lighthearted during her stay, and was in fact "the life of the house." Sunday night she was in even better spirits than usual, and remained in the parlor with the landlady-until about a quarter past 2. She then retired, bidding the latter an affectionate good-night. No more was seen of her until nearly 11 o'clock vesterday morning when, not o'clock yesterday morning when, not appearing at the breakfast table, the cook was sent to call her, and the dis-covery was made that she was dead. The body was warm, and it was evident that death had but recently taken place. When the undertaker, accomplace. When the undertaker, accompanied by the reporter, arrived on the scene, the body had been laid out for burial, but clasped in the right hand of the deceased was a brief note announcing the fatal intention of the suicide. The note was as follows: "When you find this I will be dead. I will not tell you the cause. Maud."

The neck and arms were badly discolored, but the features of the dead woman gave no indication of a painful woman gave no indication of a painful death. The remains were that of a woman probably twenty-one or twenty-two years of age, who in life must have been of very prepossessing appearance. The statements of the woman, Blanche Hamilton, who accompanied the deceased from Sioux City, threw more light on the subject than what was said by any of the others. She said that she had known the dead woman for nearly three months, having boarded at the same house with her in Sioux City for about month. She did not know that the leceased was coming here until a week ago last Saturday she met her on the train on her way to this city. At that ime the deceased told her that she was "coming here for girls, as she was keep-ing house" at Sioux City. After ar-riving here she stated that she thought she would stay here permanently.

The woman Blanche also said that the deceased had a "friend" by the name of Will, at Sioux City who was much opposed to her coming away, and offered to pay her board in Sioux City while she learned the dressmaker's trade, but told her he would "quit her" if she ever went to a "house." After coming here she tried to keep him in ignorance of her stopping place, and on Sunday evening went to the Northwestern depot to mail a letter to him, on the Sioux City train. It appeared to be the mpression of those knowing anything about the case, that the Sioux City man had found out where his sweetheart was, and had written her a letter, breaking with her. At the time she came here she had several letters in her possession, but they had all been destroyed, as none could be found among her effects. She had several fine dresses and some money. She has relatives at St. Joseph, but her parents are both supposed to be dead. No bottle or anything to indicate the nature of the powerful agent she had chosen to end her life could be found in the room. Inquiry at several drug stores in the vicinity failed to discover where she obtained the fatal drug. One druggist said that the landlady had ordered him not to sell any morphine to her girls, but to give quinine instead. Some time ago one of them came in, and ordered sixty grains of that drug. In obedience to instructions, the clerk put up sixty grains of quinine. The woman went home and took the whole dose. Had it been morphine it would not have hurt her, as she was used to taking it in very large quantities, but, being unused to the quinine, it made lots of trouble, and a doctor had to be called to relieve her. On recovering she firmly announced her ntention of killing the next drug clerk who should give her quinine for mor-phine, and, as the "old lady" countermanded her order as far as this particular one was concerned, the morphine eater always gets what she calls for now. The funeral of the friendless suicide will take place to-day, and all that was mortal of Maud Clark will be laid to rest in the grave.

When Coroner Waterman arrived in tho city in the evening he proceeded to empanel a jury and hold the inquest. Several witnesses were examined, but the jury asked to have a post mortem examination made before rendering a verdict. In searching among the effects of the deceased, a tin-type, taken by Johnson, 705 Fourth street, Sioux City, was found, and attached to it was a piece of paper marked "Miss Gerty Davis, 210 Clark street, Sioux City.

This was the only writing found among the effects. One of the witnesses stated that the deceased had told her that the name of her male friend in Sioux City was Will

The remains were removed to the undertaking rooms of Field & Estep, where the post mortem examination will be made at 10 o'clock this morning by Drs. Macrae and Bellinger.

The funeral will take place from the same rooms at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The Major's Sentence. The trial of Brown, stias "Major Williams," has created much interest here, where he ran such a sensational career and gained such notoriety in connection with the killing of Jack Hughes. There are few here but believe that he killed Hughes, but the mysterious disappearance of eye-witnesses enabled him to escape. It apyears, the jury having found him guilty of manelaughter. The closing scene on sentence day is thus given by a reporter:

In reply to questions by the court after the oath had been administered to him Brown stated that he was born in New York, would by forty-five years old August 4, 1888, and was by occupation a hotel keeper.

The Court—Have you anything to say why sentence should not be prenounced upon you.

sentence should not be pronounced upon you!

Brown—No, sir.

C. E. Patterson, of council for the prisoner, asked the court to be as lenient as possible. Mr. Patterson said Brown had teld the same story on the stand that he had told Mr. Patterson at the beginning. "I believed that story," he continued. "I believe it now. I thought I could convince a jury that it was true, but I did not. I believe that Brown was convicted of not what he did in taking the life of Patrick Kelley but for his bad character. A fact has come to my knowledge since the Patrick Kelley but for his bad character. A fact has come to my knowledge since the trial that the defense did not know at the time of the trial. This man was born of respectable parents and he grew up in Troy with nothing against him, till he enlisted in the army and served a term. He was honorably discharged, but in the army he acquired nomadic habits that led to his wanderings and to the character which led him into and to the character which led him into trouble." Mr. Patterson referred to the course taken by the bullet and argued that it showed that Patrick Kelley was the assail-ant, and not Brown. "He has three children, the oldest a son nineteen years of age, and a widowed mother who will suffer more than he will suffer. I respectfully ask that the court be as lenient as possible."

District Attorney Griffith said: "As I said

District Attorney Grimth said: "As I said at the opening of this case, the prosecuting officer did not come here to cry out for vengeance. We sought only to do our duty in this case, and a conviction has been secured. We hope the lesson will teach the criminal classes in this community that the law will be upheld, and crime will be punished, it matters not with whom criminals associated, nor who comes to their resource filer the crime. nor who comes to their rescue after the crime has been committed. I believe this conviction shows that the sentiment of the community shows that the sentiment of the community is in support of the district attorney's effort to prosecute persons who commit crime. The district attorney has no desire that this man be punished beyond a reasonable proportion to the enormity of the crime he has committed. I would it were in my power that every man who commits a crime might suffer alone. Into that so, He is might suffer alone. I pity that son. He is an honest boy, and I feel for this man's children and his widowed mother, but I stand here representing the law and order of the community, its peace and its future. The criminal classes must be given to understand that the district attorney means just what he said when he went into office, that crime must be made odious and criminals punished. I do not ask that this man be punished beyond what the law demands. I don't ask that he be punished on his previous character. The police say he bas committed no serious violation of law in Troy. I believe he sees the error of his ways, and that his conviction will be a warning to all in like conviction will be a warning to all in like cases offending."

The Court—"Brown, stand up. It is to be regretted that the painful duty is imposed upon the court of passing sentence upon a man of your appearance, of your intelligence, of your capacity, and a man situated in life with a family as you are. But the painful duty imposed upon the court is trifling as compared with the punishment the sentence will inflict upon you and upon those interested in you personally. The crime of which you stand convicted is the taking of the life of a human being, not by premeditated design, but in a cruel and unlawful manner with a dangerous and deadly weapor The law protects society against such crimes as far as the law can." After further admonition the court sentenced Brown to Clinton prison at Daunemora for twelve years at hard labor.

Yesterday the case of Grant DeWitt was occupying the attention of the district court. DeWitt was charged with assaulting a man named Osler and inflicting great bodily injuries. The trouble arose at a church in Grove township. After the meeting, as DeWitt was driving up to the steps to get a lady friend, he is said to have struck Osler with his whip, Osler chancing to be near his buggy. Osler grabbed the whip and broke it. A moment later DeWitt jumped out of his buggy and, following up Osler, struck him over the head with the butt, causing him to stag-ger under the blow and fall but for bystanders catching him and holding him up. DeWitt in defense denied that he struck him with a loaded whip, but that it was an ordinary, cheap sort of whip, and that Osler was the aggressor.

Thomas Furlong, an old resident of Council Bluffs, who removed to Kimball, Dak., writes to Mr. John Kelley, of this city, that he and his wife spent the night of the blizzard, January 12 on the open prairie. They started to go to a school house where their children were, intending to remain there with them all night, to better care for them, but lost their way and spent the entire night wandering around. Mr. Furlong was frozen on his wrists, but not seriously. His wife froze her feet so badly that several toes had to be amputated. In consequence of the exposure she has been confined to her bed ever since, until last week. They both had an escape from death they will never forget. The children remained in the school house all night, and were cared for by the teacher, so they were all right.

S. B. Wadsworth & Co. loan money. YOUTHFUL INDIAN SLAYERS. Advice to the Boy Terrors of the Redskin. Detroit Free Press: Come, my son, it is time you were getting ready for a spring campaign against the Indians and grizziles. You have been reading "Daring Dan," "Ike, the Indian Slayer," "Gus, the Grizzly Killer" and other exciting and truthful stories, intended to make a boy dissatisfied with humdrum life, and your mind is made up to go

You must have an outfit. That can be got while waiting for spring to open.
One reason why so many boy funters make a failure is because they economize too much in the outfit. Don't be stingy in buying guns. It will be all the betif you have a Spencer carbine and a double-barreled shotgun togo with your Winchester. Suppose you came sud-Winchester. Suppose you came sud-denly upon a band of eighteen Apache warriors. You could only kill sixteen of them with your Winchester, and two would be left to ride off and alarm the tribe. By having some guns along you are sure of the whole crowd, and the tribe won't get on to you.

And don't scrim on bowie knives. It would be an almost fatal mistake to start out with only two. Buy four, at least. They are for use at close quarters with grizzlies. Of course one bowie is enough to kill one bear with, but you may be attacked by four bears at once, and four knives would then be in demand. If you don't get but three bowies make up the deficiency with a Spanisə stiletto or a Noorish dagger. It will come in handy not only in a close fight, but to pick your teeth with at the camp fire. As for dress, get a fringed buckskin, a coonskin cap and regular moccasins. Such things as shirts, collars, cuffs and handkerchiefs would be only waste lug-gage. If you should appear in Miles City with a collar on it would give you away at once. Nobody would suspect that you were the young terror from the east who was aching for a chance to tie a knot in a grizzly bear's tail. You should take at least 200 pounds of ammunition. You may be corralled omewhere in the Rocky mountains by 400 fierce and determined Indians, and you don't want to lose your scaly for the vant of a few extra cartridges. All the provisions needed is a sack of jerked buf-falo meat. It doesn't make the least bit of difference whether the buffalo was thrown off his feet over a precipice or head over heels. If the meat is a little fly-blown it will add to your dignity as a hunter. You can chew plug tobacco or not, just as you feel about it, but it would be wisest to do so, All the champion terrors chew large quanties, and the juice comes handy to spit into a rat-tlesnake's eve. I wouldn't take a horse if I were you. He would be a great deal of trouble to take care of, and most of your hunting will be in a rough country. The true terror has always gone afoot, and always will. Anybody on horseback can make up faces at grizzly and gallop off out of

One great mistake which the average boy makes is in planning to accomplish too much the first season. Most of them figure on wiping out about one thousand Indians and twice that number of bears. Keep your estimate down to a reasonable figure. You feel ambitious and enthusiastic, of course, but there is a limit to what a boy can do. Set your figures at about four hundred Indians and three hundred grizzles. This will he almost two per day the year around, and will keep you from spoiling.

I should scalp every Indian I shot. It not only looks more business-like to do so, but that's what you've got a scalping-knife for, and if you can get about two hundred scalp-locks you can make the nicest door-mat you ever saw. It don't hurt a dead Indian a bit to scalp him, and if you don't take it it will go to waste. It would be well to have a sixmule team follow you at a distance of a mile or so to pick up and care for the rifles, knives, bows and arrows and war clubs of the slain Indians. These can be run east by car-lots and sold at auction, and the profits will buy all your ammunition. Don't exterminate any particular tribe of red men, but kill off about one-fourth of seven or eight different tribe. ferent tribes. This will extend your reputation as a terror.

As to the best way of killing an In-dian I shall not pretend to advise. Some boys prefer to shoot and others believe in sticking him with a knife. If you can catch him by the foot with a lasso and drag him over the earth until his spinal column is worn down to a tooth-pick. In any event the fun will all be on your side.

It is a little different with the grizzly bear. He won't be quite so terror-striken over your sudden appearance, being built on a different plan. You expect some show of resistance, however, pears now that tardy justice has over-taken him. Following his conviction for another murder at Troy, N. Y., comes his sentence, which is for twelve school board to appropriate $40,000 to Main Street.

Giving the Poor a Chance.

Burdette: Give the poor man a hance. My son, the poor man takes about all the chances without waiting to have one given him. If you give him any more chances than he takes, he will soon own everything, and run the Texas man out of the country. The fact is, we must curtail the poor man's chances a little. We must sit down on him, and hold him down, and give the rich man a chance. The poor man has had things his own way too long. He has crowded the rich man out. But for the poor man has a chance when his crowded the rich man out. the poor man this old world would have cast anchor 6,000 years ago, and be covered with moss and lichens to-day, like trial States man-of-war. Edgar a United States man-of-war. Edgar Allan Poe was the son of strolling players; George Peabody was a boy in a small grocery; Benjamin Franklin, the printer, was the son of a tallow chand-ler; John Adams was the son of a poor farmer. Gifford, the first editor of the Quarterly Review, was a common sailor; Ben Johnson—rare Ben Johnson -was a bricklayer; the father of Shakspeare couldn't spell and couldn't write his own name—neither can you; even his illustrious son couldn't spell it twice alike; Robert Burns was a child of pov-erty, the eldest of seven children, the family of a poor bankrupt; John Milton was the son of a scrivener; Andrew Jackson was the son of a poor Irishman: Andrew Johnson was a tailor: Garfield was a boy of all work, too poor even to have a trade; Grant was a tanner; Lincoln was a keel boatman and common farm hand, and the Prince of Wales is the son of a queen. It is his misfortune, not his fault, he couldn't help it, and he can't help it now. But you see, my dear boy, that's all there is of him; he's just the Prince of Wales, and he's only that because he can't help it. Be thankful, my dear boy, that you weren't born a prince; be thankful that you didn't strike twelve the first time. If there is a patch on your knee and your elbows glossy, there is some hope for you, but never again let me hear you say that the poor man has no chance. True, a poor lawyer, a poor doctor, a poor printer, a poor workman of any kind has no chance; he deserves to have none, but the poor man monopolizes about all the chances there are. Put Laban and Jacobs in business together anywhere, and in about fifteen years Jacob will own about four-fifths of the cattle, but he will have married about one-half his partner's family. Go to, my son, let us give the rich man a
