THE WOMAN OF THE FUTURE.

Not the Rival, But the Partner and Co-Worker of Man.

HER INFLUENCE OVER MEN.

A Gifted Woman's Views of the Destiny of Her Sex—Her Hopes For the Future and the Lessons She Draws From the Past.

Written for the Sunday Bee.

It is a well-known fact in natural history that the highest forms of life develop most slowly. The ephemera born in the morning, go into society and dance merrily over the green pools of their birth, become parents, and die before sunset. The elephant, with his wonderful sagacity and human powers of method and memory, is years in reaching maturity, and under favorable circumstances lives for centuries; while apes, our cousins, according to Mr. Darwin grow more diabolical as they grow older, and probably are, in the end, translated direct to the Inferno, to be herded, according to tradition, by luckless damsels who have found no other destiny. Another well-known fact is that man is the head of the animal creation; and also, that he is a creature of such slow development that a good many specimens never develop at all, but, whether from innate weakness, a worm at the heart, or blizzards of adversity, they drop off the tree and lie in abject heaps, poor, useless windfalls, "scarce fit to feed the pigs."

And now, to ascend one step higher in the scale and reach woman, is it not a fact, perhaps not as widely recognized as the others, but still a fact, that woman, not as an individual, but as a race—a woman per excellence—is but now reaching her perfection? Looking back through the centuries, do not we see that she has been gradually growing up until now she is just entering upon her magnificent maturity, and beginning to show what she was made for—to prove, indeed, that she is the crown and final finish of her race? See her in all stages! In the east and Turkey even now what is she but a baby; a thing to be played with, chidden, punished, coaxed, fed with candies and decked with pretty clothes, and carefully kept inclosed lest she should fall into mischief or danger? See her as the child of the middle ages, amused with tournaments and extravaganzas of chivalry, listening to interminable ballads about love and adventure, sung by harpers in castle hall. See the romantic girl, lying on a treacherous and dress-embroidered page to follow her knight to battle; and, if he died, rushing into the cloister, and fancying she gave herself to God by running away from her duties in the world. See her, ignorant of her own powers, and following some of her sweetest instincts, submitting to be the vassal of man, yielding obedience, without self-respect or reason, to her husband or her sons; serving patiently until the unpaid burden bore her to the ground and into her grave; consenting, without argument, to man's dictum: "I am the stronger, and I can fight, and I can wring a living from the world, and I have no nerves to be over-wrought, and so I am the master and you are the slave, or, at best, the pupil; and you are to do just as I bid you, and believe what I tell you, and imitate that nice womanly woman who said, when a candidate offered herself to the convent and wished to bring her bible with her, "No; we will have neither you nor your bible; we are a community of women who only know how to spin and to pray." And, finally, see woman in our own day—restless, inquiring, aspiring, experimenting in this direction and in that, making a thousand failures and a hundred glorious successes, feeling the unsuspended power slung at the core of her being, expanding lungs that nothing less than all the air that stirs under heaven can satisfy, and listening, half-bewildered, to the whispers of her own brain and the throbs of a heart that says: "Oh, I can love more than husband, and child, and family. I can love art, and use, and my own race. Like the heart of God, I can sympathize. I can comfort, I can strengthen all that live; and by loving as He loves, I reach my own highest happiness."

In not this somewhat the meaning of the stir and ferment we see in our day among the ranks of womanhood? And when some one ardent and too hasty sister breaks out in rank absurdity of dress or manner, or some cruelly mistaken sister imagines that liberty means license, and that the love of all mankind means free love, and that the right to labor means the right to wrangle, let us not set down the fault or folly of that one woman to the corporate body of womanhood. In every great movement there are individuals who fall both in aim and achievement, but the whole moves on to success. The explorers and settlers of our own land were, many of them, sordid treasure seekers, or fugitives from justice, or mere mercenaries; but the grand and generous idea of opening up a new world, and making a new home for humanity, led on the whole, and the result is the land of which we are so justly proud. Take another and very homely example: The swarms of grasshoppers that make their mysterious journeys across the western plains have, no doubt, some object in view, although they have never yet confided it to man; but no obstacle has ever prevented their reaching this mysterious goal. A good many rush heedlessly into the fires that are kindled in their path; a good many drown themselves in the streams they encounter; a good many stick fast in the tar and pitch spread in their route by the farmers; but over the bodies of these victims or these fanatics, or these blinded zealots the great mass presses on, and in the end achieves its purpose.

So, then, let us say that woman, having passed in her infancy, her childhood, her girlhood, and unreasoning pupillage, has reached maturity, and feels within herself both the power and the determination to rise into a more prominent and executive position in the world. How shall she do it, and how shall she adjust her new phase of existence to her relations with man? First of all, in importance and stability, remains the fact that labor attraction of the sexes to each other which results in love, marriage and the duties of parenthood. No development of woman's mental, spiritual or executive powers will ever, in one jot or tittle, alter the law of nature which leads her to love, marriage and maternity, and her other capacities must always be grouped around these fundamental bases. No doubt there are a great many women who never marry or become mothers; but should any one of them be invited to do so by the man of men in her eyes, it is more than likely that she would, for the time being, see that no duty was higher, and no vocation more congenial, than that he suggests. Some years ago a prominent artist established a class of female wood-engravers at Cooper institute, and for a while met with brilliant success; but, after another while, the work was abandoned, and the reason given by the artist, with rather a pettish laugh, was that it was quite useless to spend time and energy in teaching young women anything requiring training and experience, for by the time they learned it they were in love or married, and art was flung to the winds. It is rather to broad a statement, no doubt, but still has a good deal of truth in it, and is one of the many steps by which I have reached the firm conviction, which I here announce, the woman is not the rival, but the partner of the man; that his nature supplements hers, and hers his, in harmonious co-operation, and that either one which despises or ignores the other commits the same folly that the hands would if they despised the feet, or the head if it felt superior to the lungs.

I half-judiciously said, in the first part of this paper, that woman is the crown and glory of man, and in many ways I think she is; but a crown could be of small use without a head to wear it, and glory requires strength to sustain it. So, in my mind, dear sisters, the coming work to do for this poor old world of ours, to lay broad and deep foundations for the glorious structure we plan. Let women be educated for their work, not only by the severe and exact training of books and schools, although these are needed, but let them be taught and teach themselves habits of thought, of perseverance, of justice, of self-control, and of reserve. Learn to think before you speak, and think a good deal more than you speak. Remember that the pyramids and the cathedrals and the monuments of all sorts, that claim respect for their grandeur and scorn of time, were a long time in building; and don't expect, in your own lifetime to gather the harvest you are sowing to-day. Work for the future, and the woman of the future shall thank and bless you.

And just one word more, a sort of postscript, in which lies the gist of the whole letter: Our influence over man lies in our unlikeness more than our likeness to himself. He loves and admires our womanliness, and he is jealous and suspicious of our manliness. Then, let us never cease, however manly we may become, to clothe ourselves in the gracious garments of womanliness; and, however iron the hand beneath, be very careful never to slip off the glove of velvet. "A word to the wise," etc. FRANK LESLIE.

Kit Carson's Chum Killed. A special dispatch from Fort Garland, Col., to the Chicago Herald says: Billy Carson, a son of Kit Carson, the famous scout, shot and killed Thomas T. Tobins in a fight here yesterday. Tobins was a companion of Kit Carson and almost equally famous. His most noted exploit was the capture of the Mexican bandits, the Espanos brothers, single handed, for whose capture, either dead or alive, the territory and the United States government had offered large rewards. When Kit Carson died, Billy, his son, married Tobins' daughter, and in later years the old scout has done little but eke out a lazy existence on his ranch. Young Carson, his son-in-law, kept a store in Fort Garland and Tobins frequently visited the place. Yesterday they engaged in a quarrel, when the old scout, under the influence of liquor, announced his determination to kill Carson. The son-in-law, knowing that the old man had lost none of his remarkable ability with the use of his rifle, did not give him much latitude, and shot him down. Croupy suffocations, night coughs and all the common affections of the throat and lungs quickly relieved by Dr. J. H. McLean's Tar Wine Lung Balm.

Mme. Modjeska for a protegee, says the New York Star, a little fellow countryman of hers, who travels with the company, and is known as Johnny Tata. The countess takes a great interest in the boy and has essayed to teach him his catechism. She commenced by making him learn the seven deadly sins and the seven sacraments. She called him out one day to exhibit his wonderful memory before some friends. She made him recite the sins, one after another. Six he remembered perfectly. "What is the seventh sin, Jack?" The boy hesitated a moment, and then stammered out: "Matrimony, madame."

Milton Nobles' Legs. The Cairo (Ill.) correspondent of the Mirror tells the following on a promisee star: "Milton Nobles, the actor, is a trifle bow-legged. Monday afternoon he and some of the members of his company were at the opera house arranging the scenery, etc. for the night's performance, when the ubiquitous small boy strolled in. "What do you want here, boy?" demanded Nobles sternly. "Oh, nothing," said the boy. "I'm just lookin' round." "Well, you had better clear out." The boy looked quizzically at Nobles' legs. "Strikes me," he said, "that you had better get out an' go to some tailor an' have your legs pressed. The actor laughed good naturedly. "I guess you may stay awhile, my son." "Thanks, father." And the boy went on 'lookin'."

One On Digby Bell. One night while the McCaull opera company were singing "The Mikado" in Philadelphia, Digby Bell staid out somewhat later than usual, says the Philadelphia Times. The truth is that he lingered to see DeWolf Hopper make a Welsh rarebit, "Marching to heaven," he cried, looking at his watch. "Four o'clock! I had no idea it was so late! What will my wife say—I poor she has been waiting and watching for me these many weary hours." So she had. Gentle anticipation had, however, melted into resentment, and this natural emotion had by degrees broadened and deepened into stern indignation. So that by 4 a. m. the usually amiable Laura Joyce Bell was in a mood to deal heroically with her delinquent spouse, and her superb contralto voice was never in finer form for the impressive delivery of the riot act. At 4:15 an uncertain tread in the hall without announced the approach of the offender, and by a tremendous effort the aggrieved wife gathered together every energy of her forceful nature to receive him with what she determined should be the usually Laura Joyce Bell was in a mood to deal heroically with her delinquent spouse, and her superb contralto voice was never in finer form for the impressive delivery of the riot act.
