A Noble Engineer. Rudy Serfaas, a passenger train engineer on the Lehigh Valley road, has gone through narrow passages of railroad life, says the Philadelphia Telegraph, and has had numerous narrow escapes. He has recently displayed great bravery, but the noblest act of his life occurred last evening, while returning from Pittston with a train of which James Johnson, of this city, is conductor. After rounding a curve at Port Clinton, a rattling speed, he saw a dark object in the distance which at first seemed to be a dog. He watched it and saw it move. Then closing the throttle he discovered the object to be a little girl sitting on a tie at the edge of the track. The child's life was in peril, and the speed of the train was too great to control. Rudy quickly applied the air brake, reversed the lever, opened the throttle and dropped sand on the rails. The passengers were bounced from their seats by the sudden jar and windows were quickly raised and heads went out. Just as the engine was about to strike the girl, she looked back and saw the engineer wave his hand for her to lean forward. She heeded the warning, and the engine stopped with its last driving wheel at her side. Heaving a sigh of relief, Rudy closed his throttle, leaped to the ground, picked up the little girl and carried her across the track to the arms of her mother, who was then rushing wildly toward the train, believing her little darling had been crushed beneath the wheels. A storm of applause from crew and passengers followed, while the frightened mother attempted to bring a shower of thanks down on Rudy's bare head. The sand cover track tells the heroic work of the brave engineer to save the child's life. One backward movement of the child meant instant death, and her less forward prevented the edge of the cowcatcher from striking her side. Stewart Jones Wash'r'n guitars Hospe

BRADLEY FLAT, D. T., May 25.—(Special Correspondence of the BEE.)—In wandering over this Black Hills country I am more than ever surprised at the wonderful resources that present themselves to the view of the most casual observer. The pioneers who came here at an early day were looking for gold and silver, little dreaming of the wealth they were tramping over in the shape of tin, coal, mica and other minerals that are now attracting the attention of eastern and European capitalists. There is also marl and marble by the square miles, of good quality, and easy to work and handy to get at. There is also a superabundance of gypsum, and likewise the finest and most beautiful variegated building stone in the continent.

Thin shales are said to contain oil wells. Probably no one country on the face of the globe combines so many resources for the investment of capital with a sure profit in the future as does the Black Hills today. The beautiful parks or valleys surrounding the Hills are all susceptible of cultivation and are very productive.

Timber is abundant and one is rejoiced to strike this country after traveling over the arid plains of Western Nebraska. Then these Southern Black Hills we have our beautiful Minnekahta or Hot Springs. As a pleasure and health resort the time is not far distant when she will have no rivals, certainly no peers. A few days since I took a vacation on horseback to the west of Brady Flat over the low rolling foothills that trend away northwest toward Custer, over miles and miles of the finest grass land I ever saw, with here and there groves of pine timber and a few scattered small parks or valleys. I journeyed on feasting my eyes on the beautiful scenery whilst my mind was absorbed with the future of this great and glorious country. Away toward the west the eye was attracted by a range of hills extending southward toward the Cheyenne while still north and west were the Bear Lodge mountains at the head of the Inyan Kara. Who can tell how many comfortable homes will be nestled among these places in the lapse of the next few years. From high points on my journey I could look away southward across the Cheyenne to the bad lands and I wondered in my mind at the peculiar stretch of fancy that called upon me to know of so many places in different parts of the world that were so much wiser. There was a time not many years ago when this was the hunters' paradise. Deer, elk, bear, antelope and bison ranged here in great numbers. Continual hunting has exterminated the bison entirely, and other and smaller game is considerably thinned out. Everywhere you may see evidence of the red man's occupation of this country in the past and it is not hard to imagine why they were so loth to leave it for a less habitable locality. Sheltered as it is from the bleak winds and howling blizzards with plenty of grass for their ponies and wood and water at hand and game in abundance it is not surprising that they were jealous of the white man's encroachments and resisted as long as possible their occupation of this country. Every one of the roads and trails too, coming into the hills from different points, has the scene of many sanguinary conflicts between the red men and emigrants and stages—and are truly historic grounds. It was here that Wild Bill and other desperadoes of national repute met their fate and it was here that the lawlessness and rampant for a time retarded the development and prosperity of the country and furnishing victims for many an unknown and unnamed grave.

Utilizing Niagara. There have been so many false alarms about utilizing the wasted water power of Niagara Falls, that one hesitates to accept rumors of new propositions as likely to be carried out. The New York Mail and Express. The latest one which appears to have any backing, though not altogether an original idea, is to use the Niagara river at some distance above the falls by means of a tunnel, to divert the water to a light and power plant on the side of the river. The water would be distributed by means of lateral underground conduits to turbines placed on the bank below the falls. These could give power direct to mills, factories, etc., and by electric transmission afford a light and power to Buffalo and neighboring towns. It is claimed that by adopting this system the scenery will not be disfigured, and that the amount of water drawn off will not appreciably lessen the quantity flowing over the falls. It has always been a source of wonder to those who have studied the ground that some plan has not long ago been adopted which would meet the engineering requirements without impairing the scenic beauty of Niagara. The first attempts were certainly not in the right line, and the water power taken off by the paper mill, etc., being accompanied by a disproportionate injury.

Niagara is not to be measured by hundreds of thousands of horse-power and millions of money, it is true; but the visitor's first impression is a vivid realization of the amount of waste perpetually going on, which might be avoided. The state and the country can afford to pay a good deal to keep up the show, but surely there is margin enough, without reducing Niagara to the condition of some of the smaller falls where the water is turned on from a dam for the gratification of tourists who can afford the luxury.

How They Sleep in Japan. Colonel Bissell in a letter to the Hartford Courant says: The Japanese bed is simply a futon spread upon the matting. They lie on this and spread another futon over them, and rest their heads upon wooden pillows and are happy. A futon is a thickly wadded quilt, exactly like our comfortable, and a very nice arrangement such a bed is for the housekeeper. The bed is easily made, and in the morning the futon is folded and put away in a closet and the "chamber work" is done. They wear no night-dresses, but as every person, even in the poorest and humblest state, takes a hot bath once, and in the majority of cases twice a day, there is nothing uncleanly in the wearing of the same dress at night which is worn in the day. The futon spread upon the matting was rather a hard bed for our unaccustomed sides, so we had six or eight thicknesses put over and instead of luxurious wooden pillows, we had one futon rolled and put at the head of our alleged couch. Thus we made really a comfortable bed. Then musquito nettings were brought in, and the Japanese have reduced this branch of their domestic economy to a science. The nets are as large as the room, and fastened by the corners to hooks in each corner of the room, and when one has gracefully and quickly crawled under the edge, as boys in my days used to crawl under the canvas of a circus tent, there is as comfortable and secure as possible. Nets for children are made on little frames and put over the children wherever sleep overtakes them, and I have often and often seen children in the shape of unclad nature in verandas and porches and open front rooms of houses, covered by these nettings, sleeping the sweet sleep of Japanese childhood. I believe children sleep there better than they do in any other land, for the reason now recalled, that I never heard a child cry at night in all my travels in Japan, and there were often many of them at the tea houses where we stopped. I do not generalize and say that children do not cry at night in Japan, for that would not be true, and besides, they might give young American mothers an undue desire to go there. I only say that I never heard the dread sound.

The Names of the Months. January—The Roman Janus presided over the beginning of everything, hence the first month of the year was called after him. February—The Roman festival Februs was held the 15th day of this month in honor of Lupercus, the god of fertility. March—Named from the Roman god of war, Mars. April—Latin Aprilis, probably derived from asperite, to open, because spring generally begins and the buds open in this month. May—Latin Maius, probably derived from Maia, a feminine divinity worshipped at Rome the 1st day of the month. June—June, a Roman divinity worshipped with the greatest honors. July (Julius)—Julius Caesar was born in this month. August—Named by Emperor Augustus Caesar, B. C. 32, after himself, as he regarded it a lucky month, being that in which he had gained several victories. September (septem or seven)—September was the seventh month in the old Roman calendar. October (octo)—Eighth month of the old Roman year, but the 1st of this month is the sun enters the tropic of capricorn, and forms the winter solstice. December (decem, or ten)—December was the tenth month of the early Roman year. About the 21st of this month the sun enters the tropic of cancer, and forms the winter solstice.

The Only College of Heraldry. The only college of heraldry in this country has had many active candidates situated in Newark, N. J. A harness manufacturer in that city makes a specialty of crests and coats-of-arms for the coaches of the rich. One of the partners of this concern devotes all his time to hunting for quarters for making crests and designing. It may seem at first sight that his task must be an easy one. But the fact is, he is obliged to use a great deal of discretion. A man who has made a fortune in patent medicine, for instance, does not want a coat-of-arms made up of a liver pill rampant over a bilious tongue prostrate. A millionaire who has gained his wealth in codfish has no longing for a crest representing a fish-ball couchant, or a "pick-up" crowder on a ground of sea-green.
