A Pointed Truth. General Sherman is a most careful and intelligent observer of public affairs, and he has an exceedingly terse and pointed way of stating the results of his observations.

The government is represented in England by Mr. Phelps, who was a somewhat active democrat during the rebellion, when among other evidences of his anti-union sentiment he publicly characterized President Lincoln as a buffoon and otherwise attempted to disparage that great man, then burdened with a weight of cares and responsibilities greater than was borne by any man of his time, and who exhibited through all a wisdom and patriotism never surpassed.

WHEN the report became known that William H. Barnum was again selected chairman of the Democratic national committee, the mule market went up a peg.

These examples will be sufficient to justify the statement of General Sherman. The present administration has retained a few consular officers who were appointed under previous administrations, and who consequently were union men, but among its own appointments of men to represent the government abroad, not one, so far as we know, was a true friend of the union in the day of peril.

HOME RULE in Ireland has taken a new lease of life since Mr. Gladstone has again infused some of his old-time vigor into the fight. In consequence the Irish leaders have picked up courage, and it looks now as if the house of commons is to be made the battle ground of another prolonged struggle for Irish self-government.

These examples will be sufficient to justify the statement of General Sherman. The present administration has retained a few consular officers who were appointed under previous administrations, and who consequently were union men, but among its own appointments of men to represent the government abroad, not one, so far as we know, was a true friend of the union in the day of peril.

IT ISN'T much of a recommendation to ambitious young men to run for congress when a bright young congressman like Perry Belmont, of New York, after eight years' service in the house, is tired of being "an ornamental bird" for his constituents. The truth of the matter is that it is difficult to accomplish anything in the house in the present temper of the two parties. A man who has ambition can find a field more satisfactory for his ability outside of the halls of congress.

These examples will be sufficient to justify the statement of General Sherman. The present administration has retained a few consular officers who were appointed under previous administrations, and who consequently were union men, but among its own appointments of men to represent the government abroad, not one, so far as we know, was a true friend of the union in the day of peril.

NEWSPAPERS that feed their patrons on plates are liable occasionally to impose upon them, and make themselves supremely ridiculous. A striking example of plate enterprise is furnished by our venerable contemporary, the Nonpareil, across the river, which prints an address alleged to have been delivered by the Reverend Talmage at the Crete assembly. As a matter of fact, Dr. Talmage is on the Atlantic beach, and his address is still among the things that are to be. He failed to keep his appointment at Crete, and his literary managers that supply his sermons and addresses in advance could not have foreseen this break on the part of the great pulpit pounder. Such of the people of Council Bluffs and western Iowa as still depend on the Nonpareil for their daily information have had a treat out of an empty decanter.

These examples will be sufficient to justify the statement of General Sherman. The present administration has retained a few consular officers who were appointed under previous administrations, and who consequently were union men, but among its own appointments of men to represent the government abroad, not one, so far as we know, was a true friend of the union in the day of peril.

THE FORT WORTH board of trade has called for a deep-water convention July 10, to which delegates of business men from all the western states and territories are invited. The object of the convention is to discuss which of the three bays on the coast of Texas would be most advisable to develop into a deep-water harbor. The movement inaugurated by the people of Texas is destined to be fraught with great benefits to the west. With deep-water ports on the Texas coast easy communication with Europe can be established and a great trade can eventually be built up. The obstacles in the way are many. The harbors of Texas are few in number, shallow and dangerous to navigation. There are three principal inlets which can be made safe and serviceable. These are Galveston bay, Matagorda bay, and Aransas pass. Of the three it is thought that Aransas pass, 200 miles south of Galveston, can with the least expense be dredged and deepened so as to allow the entrance of large ocean steamers. The serious objection to Aransas pass is its location. There are no cities at the head of this gulf, and it is too far down the coast. It is stated, however, that if the government will aid the state of Texas in improving this waterway, that the various railroads of Texas will unite in building a city at the head of the Pass, which would be made the terminus of all the leading lines in the state. But it is doubtful whether a project so stupendous a scale will be undertaken. The more probable action of the Fort Worth convention will be to urge on congress and the state the necessity of improving Galveston bay. In the judgment of many engineers, the bay of Galveston under the present conditions is best suited for the purpose of a safe and deep water harbor.

These examples will be sufficient to justify the statement of General Sherman. The present administration has retained a few consular officers who were appointed under previous administrations, and who consequently were union men, but among its own appointments of men to represent the government abroad, not one, so far as we know, was a true friend of the union in the day of peril.
