A Model Residence.

Judge James has improved his park greatly but the latest and best is the new cottage just completed on Second avenue. Its location being one of the finest in the city, it is gratifying to see such a residence placed there. The judge calls it a "cottage," but it is spacious and elegant enough to be given a less modest title. It has eight rooms and the arrangement is wonderful for attractiveness and convenience. The exterior is one of the most pleusing in the city. The interior has a finish which is throughout, in every joint and fitting, as fine as cabinet work The first floor is finished in California red-wood, rubbed down to a bright polish. The hallway is finished also in this beautiful wood, with oak placed in pleasing contrast, especially in the wainscotting, where the panels of redwood and oak give a charming

The upper floor is in Louisiana cypress. which finishes up beautifully. Of course all the conveniences of water, gas, furnace, bath room, etc., are provided. It is indeed a model which those planning to build would leave the course of the do well to inspect. Judge James originally intended to rent this, but has concluded to sell it instead, it being too expensive and finely furnished to be occupied by tenants.

You people who have purchased property of J. G. Tipton the past year, and doubled your money, hold up your hands. Just 999. Those who have not realized their investments good will please hold up your hands. Not any. Well, that's pretty good.

Her Hand Crushed.

Emma Auterveith, an employe at the canning factory, had her left hand terribly lacer ated vesterday morning, in one of the cutting machines. Two of the fingers were so badly cut that it was thought that they would have to be amputated, but after a closer examination the attending physicion concluded that both could be saved. The injured member was carefully dressed, and last evening the patient was suffering but little pain. Miss Auterveith is the daughter of the janitor of the Third street school. This unfortunate accident will keep her from work for several weeks during the busiest part of the season.

The liquor seizure case of Henry Delong and W. C. Utterback was heard by Justice Schurz yes rday. The prosecution charges searching premises without authority. A search warrant was issued to look for liquors at the "Marble Works," on Upper Broadway, and it is claimed that the special officers serving the warrant searched premises not ordered in the warrant. The court adjourned at 11:30 o'clock in the afternoon. The counsel for the prosecution had a search warrant and constable from 'Squire Biggs' court ready, and ordered the liquor, which was in in a wagon in front of 'Squire Schurz' office, seized and taken away. The constable took possession of the ardent and bore it away. When the case was renewed in the afternoon 'Squire Schurz ordered the liquor brought back, and Constable Wesley re-turned it. The attorney for the prosecution made an exhaustive plea, and was rewarded by a decision in favor of his clients. The court ruled that the searchers had no authority to enter No. 111 Broadway, when their warrant stated No. 117, and ordered all liquor seized in the former place returned.

Death of Mrs. Hillas.

Died at Don City, on the evening of the 17th, of malarial fever, Mrs. U. C. Hillas, aged 41 years, wife of a prominent business man of that place. Over ten years ago Mrs. Hillas was a victim of malpractice and after trying every known remedy and submitting to many painful operations, she was told by the best physicians that her case was hope less. This sad decision did not extinguish the sunlight of her disposition and no word of sensure escaped her lips for those who were responsible for her misfortune. To her were responsible for her misfortune. To her "Life was real, life was earnest." Se kept her place in the family and social circles and her home was a favorite resort of both the old and young. Her life was full of good deeds, many of which were unknown until after her death, and her self-sacrificing christian spirit left its impress on all who knew her. Her death was most edifying and consoling to her family and friends. Her funeral took place on Sunday morning, from the Catholic church at Dunlap, Rev. Father McCormick officiating.

McCormick officiating.
There never was a more generous tribute paid to woman's real worth or more genuine sorrow manifested outside of family ties. The funeral was the largest and the floral display the most elaborate that ever occurred in this part of the state. Her remains were interred in a grave which was lined with white linen and decorated with beautiful flowers. Her devoted husband and little daughter, her aged father, sisters and familes of Dunlay and Chicago, have the sincere sympathy of the entire community in their sad affliction.

The Saloons Must Pay License. It is rather doubtful whether or not the saloon men will have the necessary nerve to open their places of business to-day, after getting such a dose last Monday morning for keeping open on Sunday. Chief Lucas says he will continue as he has begun, and will arrest the law breaker in every instance. This does away with the Sunday saloon, and as soon as Mayor Rohrer returns from his Missouri trip, there will be some fun for the liquor dealers. Some time ago he insisted that the saloon men should pay a monthly fine of $25 to the city, under penalty of being shut up. They paid the required amount for one month, but they were shortly after-ward closed up by the Law and Order league, which so disgusted them that they vowed they would not pay the mayor another cent as he could give them no protection. have thus far kept their word, and the city treasury is running low. The mayor kept hoping they would repent, but all in vain, and he will now proceed to make good his statement that the saloons must 'put up or shut up.'' He has given the quor dealers an ample opportunity to come to time with the cash, and has decided that they do not intend to pay a cent. The only course now left for him is to give the chief of police orders to close them up, and plainly prove that he means just what he says and that his order was not a mere "bluff." If Chief Lucas is to arrest those who insist on running saloons to-day he should see to it running saloons to-day he should see to it that all are served alike, rich and poor. It is claimed that last Sunday only a few out of the many were molested. Some were or-dered to close, and on agreeing to do so no more attention was paid to them, and as soon as the officer's back was turned they pro-ceeded to business. There should be no such foolishness. What is good for one is good

Cheaper to Subscribe. For several mornings lately the proprie tors of the Conner book store have been unable to find their Omaha Herald, although the carrier boy insisted that he had left it as The only conclusion to be arrived was that some one was stealing it, and Captain O'Crien, of the merchants' police, was put to work on the case. Yesterday morning he secreted himself in the vicinity, and the carrier was instructed to mark the paper so that it could be identified. The plan worked very well and the thief was observed to deftly abstract the paper from the door and coolly walk away with it. At this juncture the "cop" nailed him, and shortly afterward he was taken before Squire Schurz for trial. He gave the name of Charles A. Gager, and said that he was married and was in the employ of a leading florist of the city. He was fined $5 and costs, and experienced considerable difficulty in securing that amount. This habit of stealing morning papers has made considerable trouble for the various newspaper offices, and they have determined to "cinch" the offenders whenever they are caught. Papers are furnished at a very low price, and there is no excuse for the petty thieves who make a practice of stealing them. In this case the culprit got off very easily, but others of his like who do not take timely warning, will have to take their dosc

The Railway Crossings.

Since the change of grade on Sixth street the railway companies have neglected to put in suitable crossings over their tracks. This has caused a great deal of complaint among the citizens in that vicinity, and they have sought redress at the hands of the city council. The matter should receive prompt attention. The railroad companies are very indifferent to the wishes of this city, and should be brought up with a round turn. They have received almost everything that they have asked, but show no disposition to return any favors. No matter how small the desired change, it requires very decisive action on the part of the council to secure it Some time ago the council ordered the ob-structions under the Indian creek railroad bridges removed, but it required several visits of the city marshal, and the serving o innumerable papers, to bring the attention o the interested parties to the matter. This indifference causes a great deal of needless annoyance, and the council is under no obli annoyance, and the council is under no obli-gations to handle the companies with silk gloves. The council is supposed to have these matters under its own control, and should assert its authority, instead of allow-ing these domineering corporations to sub-ject the citizens to whatever annoyances they may desire. they may desire.

HIGH-PRICED HONORS.

What It Costs to Enjoy the Seat of a Congressman.

Globe-Democrat: "What does it cost to come to congress?" said a veteran representative, repeating my query. Well, there would be 300 and more different replies from as many congressmen. On an average I should say that it costs a year's salary, or half of the salary for the term, that is to say, "Does your estimate cover the cost of senatorships?" "No, indeed. If we count in senators the average would run a great deal higher. By 'member' we mean a memhouse of representatives. Some members get off with little or no expenditure of money; others are bled from the word 'go.' Those from the large cities, as a rule, find the congressional toy and their pretty title of 'honrable most expensive, but it is not atways so. A man's ability and general fitness are minor considerations. Long public service counts something in mitigating the damages, but a long purse is the most effective campaign document the country over. Even where a man has no opposition he has to come down with the cash to buy oil for campaign machinery. Take the case of Amos Cummings, the bright hewspaper man who represents the Sixth New York district. The nomination of his party came to him unsought and on a silver salver. It was what we call 'a dead sure thing —a nomination equivalent to election-but, all the same, Amos had to spend probably $6,000 before he drew a month's salary as a member of con-"For what?"

"Oh, for many things. For assessment by campaign committees; for the maintenance and equipment of clubs and other political organizations; for benefits, balls, picnics and excursions; for banners and banner-raising; for charities to the poor and needy of the district, and to beats and bummers whom it is impossible to escape. Of course some of these expenses might be avoided, but not by a good-hearted fellow who likes to be liked, who accepts no favors that he cannot recipro cate, and who would mix freely with his constituents. Yet the cost of congressional honors to a man like Commings, in a district like his, is small compared to the outlay required of men like Belmont and Blsss, of New York; Bayne of Pittsburg; Bingham, of Philadelphia; Morse, of Boston, and Felton, of San Francisco. In addition to being good fellows and high livers they are reputed to be men of wealth, and must pay to sustain their reputation whether they value it or not. I doubt whether any one of these gentlemen, or of a dozen others that I might name, gets to Washington without spending two years' salary for his footing, and the bleeding goes on from session through session, so long as they are here. Yet every one of these members has an experience and an acquaintance with methods in legislation which should yield him a biennial dividend in a certificate of election clear of cost. It is to be said, however, that after a few years here a fellow learns to avoid many of the money traps that beset the congressional aspirant and the novice in congressional life. Politics are like any other game-most expensive to a beginner, although a beginner may now and then win a big pot on a small stake. "No, I do not call William L. Scott a beginner. He probably paid a bigger price than any of us for his whistle, but he knew what he was about, and footed the damages like a little man. When one millionaire sits down to capture a district conceded to the opposition, and has another millionaire as his opponent. the circulation of national bank notes i very active. Twenty-five thousand dollars is a reasonable guess of the amount that Bill Scott may have expended legit imately, as campaign expenses go, in such an undertaking. I know men who have spent as much and then failed. Just let a known millionaire take a re publican nomination in one of the New York districts with a top-heavy democratic majority, and he will find it easy enough to get rid of a year's interest or his fortune. Thorndike Rice and Larry Jerome are not millionaires, but they could throw some light on the subject. none the worse for his long run. What about the men who read their title clear, term after term, without stand old war horses like Kelley and Randall, Holman and Cox, and acknowledged party leaders like Reed and Carisle, who have become more valuable to heir districts than their districts are to them, and who can afford to snap their fingers, not only at the strikers and camp followers, but at local bosses. Jenerally, however, the men who find running for congress the least expensive are from the rural districts of the south and west, where politics has not become so much a matter of money. In the south particularly, oratorical gifts, or 'talent' of one sort or another, goes about as far as money, and a war record or personal popularity goes farther than either 'talent' or money. Then if a southern or western or western youngster manages to make a hit, however, small, in his first term state or local pride is very apt to make him his own successor. Members from agricultural districts with an eye on a second term, have a great advantage in constituencies appeasable and purchasable with garden seeds and public documents, which are not a legal tender m ong city politicians. But the trail of the money serpent is beginning to be visible in the south, too. There is a member from Georgia whose first election cost him only $200, and whose last cost him $2,000; and there is another from Louisiana who spent nothing to get here the first time, and was out of pocket $5,000 the last time he ran." Suppose a poor man gets a nomination, how is he to meet his assessments and pay the costs generally of election? "Now you are asking a question that every man must answer for himself. If you are thinking of running, however, I may tell you confidentially that any man who has a ghost of a chance of success can find a backer without difficulty. Many corporations and manufactories find a mortgage on a congress-elect about as good an investment as a mortgage on real estate or a railway bond. 'How about the foreclosure?

"Well, you remember the topical song in Nanon-'It's a question of time.'

A Farm Hand's Wild Ride for Life. New York Sun: Hiram Cass, a farm hand in the employ of Abner Whitney of Clifton township, Pa., had a thrilling experience. Since the latter part of May Farmer Whitney has been pasturing a drove of large steers in a fiftyacre field on the mountain about threequarters of a mile from his house. The lot is separated from the main part of there is a forest on the south and west sides of the field. There are four good springs in the pasture, and all the attention that has been paid to the steers since they were turned out was to feed salt to them once a week. Owing to some neglect no salt had been given to the cattle in more than a fortnight, and last Wednesday Farmer Whitney told

Cass to take a pailful of it up there and feed it to the steers.

The moment the cattle saw Cass ener the field they galloped toward him at the top of their speed, and, before h had time to place the salt on the ground in little heaps so that they could all get a lick, the greedy, long-horned animals completely surrounded him. They were so hungry for salt that half a dozen of them tried to stick their noses in the pail at once, and Cass had to kick them in the jaws and yell at them to keep them from goring him and trampling on him. While he was doing all he could to make a passage between the uneasy prutes, the largest steer in the herd rushed up from behind with his head down, and, in his eager search for salt on the ground, he knocked Cass's feet from under him. Cass lost his balance and tipped over backward, sitting squarely down on the steer's head between his long horns, and dropping the pail as he did so.

went the frightened steer's head, and Cass, fearing that he would be thrown, grabbed a horn in each hand. The steer then started to run like wildfire, and Cass clung to the horns for dear life. The other brutes became frightened at the strange spectacle, and with heads and tails up, they ran belowing after the affrighted fugitive, that bellowed at almost every leap. Cass's legs prevented the runaway steer from seeing ahead very well, and three imes in his terrific circuit around the field the steer came within a few inches of running his head against trees. The hired man is a strong fellow, and erally courageous, but he said that he had never before in his life been so thoroughly terrified, and he knew that while he was in danger of having his brains dashed out against a tree at any moment, he would be trmpled to death by the moving herd behind him if he threw himself from the steer's head. On he hung with all his might, pray ing that the steer soon would stop, and round and round the field the whole drove dashed like a herd of frightened At the end of what Cass said seemed to be half an hour, but what he supposed was in reality not more that ten minutes, the steer panted as though wind was giving out, slackened his speed a little, and dashed straight toward a strong brush fence next to the woodland. He leaped part way over it. became entangled in the mass of limbs and sapplings, and fell upon his right side, where he lay struggling and kick ing long enough for Cass to spring into the thicket at a safe distance from the sharp horns of the scared and half-exhausted beast. The other cattle did not follow the fugitive steer, stopping in their mad dash just as he fell into the brush. Cass said that he was as weak as cat for several minutes, and that his nerves were unstrung from fear and the energy he had expended in clinging to the steer's horns. It was the most peril-ous position he was ever in, but he was not permanently injured, and in the course of half an hour the steer was
