The Boyd Will Be Open Every Night With "The Wife" and "The Tin Soldier" to Delight Omaha's Playgoers.

The Remodeled Grand.

The Grand opera house will be reopened on tnext Monday for the season. It will present an appearance which will strike with surprise every one of its patrons of last year. The hanging of the boxes on the side have been removed and in their place the enlarged gallery, which now sweeps in a majestic curve, rests. This gallery has been slanted so that every seat in it has a beautiful view of every part of the stage. It ex tends over what was the old landing and stairway inside the entrance as also over the space which was formerly occupied by sev-eral rows of seats. The latter have been re-moved so that there is now a large space between the entrance and the last row of chairs. This will be carpeted and used as a foyer and its walls will be hung with choice engravings and portraits. The seatt have been upholstered in plush a change from the leather of last year, which will be greatly appreciated. By those changes the interior assumes more of the appearance of an opera house than it had before, and at the ornamentation of gilding and bright colors. The proscenium boxes of last year have been retained and the wails around them have undergone considerable transfor-mation, the mouldings and panels showing up brilliantly in gold, silver and bronze. On the large space over the box entrances are portraits of Mendelssohn and Beethoven, while above the stage arch, there are designs The seating capacity of the house is 1,800.

J. C. Crawford remains as manager, J. W.
Miner, well known in this city, will act as treasurer, with Ed Goodman, who filled the same place last year, as assistant treasurer.

The Wife. Expectations run high in regard to Mr. Daniel Frohman's Lyceum theater company, from its own theater in New York City, in their phenomenal success, "The Wife," Belasco and DeMille's American society comedy drama at Boyd's opera house for three night's commencing to-morrow (Monday) evening. It is positively announced the production of the play here will in every manner be as complete as was seen at the Lyceum theater, New York, for 250 nights, and at the Baidwin the ater. San Francisco, for fifty nights. The members of the company who will appear in "The Wife" are Hubert Kelcey, Henry Miller, Nelson Wheatcroft, W. J. Le Moyne, Charles Walcott, William Faversham, Charles Dickson, Walter Bellows, Georgia Cavyan, Louise, Dillon, Grace Henderson. Cayvan, Louise Dillon, Grace Henderson, May Robson, Olive Brooks, Mrs. Charles Walcott and Mrs. Thomas Whiffene. "The Wife" is claimed to be a bold and breezy satire on society, which everybody relishes and society enjoys. It is doubtful whether any dramatic company and play have ever re-ceived the high enconiums accorded "The

The Eden Musee. Under the management of Sackett and Lawler, whose efforts last season were so successful in rendering the Eden Musee a popular resort, this place of amusement will open for the season to-day under the direction of the same gentlemen. For the opening performance and throughout the week a company of rare excellence has been engaged and will perform in the theatorium, while in the curio hall objects of rare interest while in the curio hall objects of rare interest will be exhibited. Novelties are announced in every department and the management promise during the present season to render the Musee superior to any similar place of amusement in the country.

"A Tin Soldier."

Mr. Charles H. Hoyt's farcical play, "A Tin Soldier," which is one of that prolific authors best works, will open at Boyd's opera house on Thursday, September 6, continuing through the week. "A Tin Soldier" is on a higher plane than any other of Mr. Hoyt's plays, and has had a remarkably successful run. Seats go on sale Wednesday morning.

Davenport 8, Omaha 2. Licked! And by the Babies at that. You see the Omahas thought they had a dead easy thing of it and they could do about as they saw proper, But that's when the Davenports fooled 'em. And remember, too, the peerless battery, Lovett and Nagle, officiated for the home team. But that, nor saltpetre could have saved them. They were whipped cleanly, beautifully, incontinently, and that's the whole story.

The small crowd who witnessed the fight sighed disgustedly as the second run came ambling nonchalantly in in the last innings, and everybody got up and went home with a look upon their faces as if they had been stealing chickens and got caught at it. stealing chickens and gesterday was like Thursday's game that of yesterday was like Thursday's game that of yesterday was lazy, listless, uninteresting, and the three hundred people present never attempted once to make the welkin ring. They were satis-fied to sit just like so many wooden Indians and stare blankly out into the field before Shem.

It didn't require but a moment to retire the

It didn't require but a moment to retire the poet, Annis and Crooks in the first. The two first went out on httle pushes to the infield, while Jack died on a high foul to old Dick Dwyer. For the babies, Forster signalized their half by banging the atmosphere three very cruel blows, and Fisher and McCauley were fielded out to O'Connell.

In the second P. Os.' high fly, which a man ought to have caught with both legs shut and his eyes tied behind his back, was muffed by Doran. He might as well have caught it, though, because O'Connell was doubled up by Cooney's drive to Forster, and Patsey Oliver flied out to McCullom. Moyer was the first of the drive to Forster, and Patsey Oliver flied out to McCullom. Moyer was the first of the Infants to face the unconquerable Lovett in their half, and for his patience in waiting for a ball he got his base on five bad ones. It isn't often Lovett does that. McCullom perished on a high foul handsomely caught by O'Connell. Then Moyer skipped clear round to third on a wild pitch. Doran then came forward and drove one with a mane on it at Cooney, but Cooney caught it and like a shot drove it home to Nagle to cut Moyer off, who had broke for home the second Doran's bat collided with the sphere. It was a good throw and a close decision, but ond Doran's bat collided with the sphere. It was a good throw and a close decision, but a fair one. Moyer crossed the plate in safety. The Omahas were not ruffied at this. It was too small a matter. When they got ready they'd go in and hammer out enough runs to win and that's all they wanted. So they continued to dilly-dally along until the sixth, when Lovett began the music with a cracking safe drive to centre. He stole second, and a few small boys on the bleaching boards squealed with ecstacy. It tickled them to see the rotund twirier commit the larcony. The Poot now came along with one of his familiar drives, and Tommy, amidst a cloud of dust and perspiration, shot athwart the plate. Burns set the children to cachinating again by going into second head first. It was a neat steal, but most everybody thought he was going to swallow the bag. But he had no such intention; all he

SPANKED BY LITTLE BABIES. wanted was to get his hand on it so Mr. Cusick wouldn't make him sit down. Billy Foxy Crooks didn't mince matters, but went right to work and corked out a dady single to right to work and corked out a dandy single to center, but spoiled it by being caught trying to purloin second. P. O. followed imme-diately after with a clean one to right, but he got no further, for Cooney died on a pop-up to Foster, Annis in the meantime coming home.

Well, Omaha had the lead by one run, and that's all she wanted. They had too much feeling for the babies, and didn't want to rub feeling for the bables, and didn't want to rub it in on them.

At last the fatal minth came round, and after the Omahas had been neatly done for the bables came in for their closing whack.
Fisher began the business by catching the first ball pitched square on the proboscis and lifting it out over Annis and McGarr's heads for two cushions. That looked rather ominous but it wasn't a maker for what was to for two cushions. That looked rather ominous, but it wasn't a marker for what was to follow. McCauley came next, and as wonderful as it seems, he whanged the first ball pitched to him right out to the same spot where Fisher's had gone. Of course this sent Fisher home. The audience began to fidget uneasily in their seats. Some strange indefinable prescience told them of coming disaster. Moyer was the next man, and, you must believe it, because it is gospel, he hit the first ball sent to him such a crack that it screamed right out loud and kept yelling for help at the top of its lungs as it tore through the air out toward the center fielder's head. McCauley galloped home and the game was won, and you ought to have the game was won, and you ought to have seen the people getting out of the park, You'd a thought the cops were after them.

The afternoon game was exciting and well played all through, though there was considerable of ill feeling ail round. Smith and Tuckerman were the opposing pitchers, and both did effective work. The audience was large and enthusiastic. In the fourth inning Earle was knocked out for several minutes by a foul tip taking him on the right knee. In the seventh inning Smith was doubled up by Earle striking him in the stomach while cutting him off at the home plate, and Hutchinson was placed in the box for the balance of the game, against which the visitors kicked hard. In the ninth inning Phelan was called out at second by a close decision and the crowd roasted the umpire. Maculiar talked saucy and was fined $15.
