The Metropolis of Western Daves County as Seen by a Bore Correspondent - Present Actualities and Future Certainties.

Called at Crawford.

CRAWFORD, Neb., Oct. 5. [Special Correspondence of THE BEE.] - In his late excellent book on "Tree Planting," General Beislin has dealt with the influence of cultivation of the soil, and especially of forest culture in modifying climate and making agriculture possible where it had formerly been considered out of question.

Let me give the history of a single farm, which directly adjoins the town site of Crawford, owned by J. A. Cummings. In 1840 General Beislin has dealt with the influence of cultivation of the soil, and especially of forest culture in modifying climate and making agriculture possible where it had formerly been considered out of question.

A REMARKABLE TRANSFORMATION. Hide with me from Chadron, that magic city, the county seat of Daves county, down the White river.

farm was capable of accomplishing when joined to industry, push and thrift. I wish some of our eastern writers on the "rain belt" could have seen the fine farm of 600 acres owned and cultivated by County Commissioner Lane, situated about three miles from Crawford down the White river.

WELL CULTIVATED HOMESTEADS of Cyrus Smith, John Wells and N. S. Townsend, who are growing everything that can be raised in Nebraska on the great flat from which, five years ago, Fort Robinson was supplied with hay. Or if these theorists about hydroponics, or "eternal laws" (which I do not think they have ever understood) were still unsatisfied, I would drive them to White Clay, to the farm of my friends Brainard and Wilbur, around to Deadman, where they are growing the most successful crops of the "rain belt" and making it flourish like the rose, and up Soldier creek, now lined with small farms and gardens, where Rodgers and Nutchings are showing the world what they know about farming on a good soil.
