Stolen Diamonds. About 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon the residence of William S. Keeline, of Keeline & Fet, at 719 Seventh avenue, was entered by a sneak thief, who secured about $200 worth of jewelry.

The property stolen consisted of a diamond ring, diamond earrings, pearl ring, hand glass, and such other articles lying on the dresser as the thief could easily conceal upon his person.

In leaving the house he passed within two feet of the servant girl, who had a good view of him. She was able to furnish a complete description of him, and officers Cusick and Mullen yesterday succeeded in arresting a party who exactly tallied with the description furnished. He was in company with another young

W. Marriage a Failure in This Case? Baltimore American: Several naval officers were today discussing in the navy department the question whether marriage is a failure or not. After various expressions of opinion had been made, a very intelligent officer, who had quietly listened, remarked: "I believe that a common, every-day illustration of domestic life is a better argument to use than all the brain theorizing you can compass. I will tell you a true story, gentlemen, and when I am through there will be little doubt among you whether the parties I will speak of were not better off by the marriage tie. You may know that I went to England on a secret mission for the government. When I reached Portsmouth I was a stranger, but my pockets were full of hard cash, and this fact encouraged me greatly, as I knew that if I could only get something of the English navy and to get hold of the secrets involved in the building of their ships, I found plenty of men who claimed to know everything and offered me large sums of money. I did not think I would pick out the men I thought would do me the most good. I never thought that an officer holding a subordinate place would prove to be my best friend. An intimation was given that that officer had had some valuable information which, if he would give, would be worth its weight in gold. I called at the officer's house one evening, and was kindly received. He took me to his home of elegant furniture which I saw, what I wanted, and what money I would give him for the information he possessed. Luckily, his wife was present at the interview, and she intended at first to withdraw from the room when the conversation began, but to assume a confidential tone, but at my solicitation she remained, and it was well that she did, as it proved to my advantage. After I had almost talked myself into giving him the information I thought, 'I will give him a point where he would give me the desired promise, he surprised me by replying that his honor was at stake, and his position as an officer in her majesty's service would not permit him to do as I requested. I thought it all up, and as I rose to leave, I said: 'Make up your mind quickly, as I leave here in a day or so. The offer I make you will give you some business for many a day, and the secret you reveal will never be divulged.' This did not move him, and I left the house, never expecting to hear from them. The next day, as I was getting ready to leave my room at the hotel, I heard a knock at my door. 'Come in,' said I; and who should my visitor be but the officer's wife. She walked to the desk in my room and laid down a package. I knew that it contained what I wanted. With out saying a word, she quietly withdrew. Her presence in the room was not over a minute, but, as my hopes and ambitions were centered in that package, it was an angel's visit to me. The package contained a small book, and had down to the minutest detail. That night a trusted messenger carried to the lady a box in which, gentlemen, was money enough to keep any one of us in good luck for a year or two. I was glad that the woman held me in this undertaking for her own sake, for while everything in her house was neat and nice, yet I saw, and in fact knew, that she and her husband did not have a cent more than a bare subsistence, and I also knew that the amount she received from me was looked upon as a fortune. Gentlemen, do you think that man made a mistake in marrying that woman? As his business was done, I married men smile save over their faces, and as the application was one that involved more than one question, they silently stole out of the room.

A Candidate's Diary. Minneapolis Journal: Monday, October 29.—I had a seven-page letter this morning and asked for a receipt of a bill for $27 which he owes me; intimated that twenty men working for him asked his advice as to how to vote. I will report him to the company if I am not careful. Member of the Monday Day Adventists called this morning and tried to get me to pledge my word to support a measure making Saturday the Sabbath—subscribed for 756 pages of tracts and promised to send my nephew to his Sunday school. (The boy is deaf and dumb.) Went to newspaper office to work the editor for a puff; found sixteen men there; talked to him upon my jaw worked conversation and then started in on the deaf and dumb alphabet; promised him a scoop if he'd give me a column boom—got two lines in the paper—met a reporter next day—took him to dinner and sent him to the office and did not get had been discharged the day before.

Tuesday, Oct. 30.—A man across the street borrowed my horse and buggy the other day—kept it three days and returned it this morning—horse lame and buggy four spokes are gone and the thills are broken—whip and robe missing; the borrower then asked me for $10 to clinch a vote for me. Gave a fellow $20 for tickets—said he had to hire a horse and buggy to carry them—then he had them—had in the Louisiana lottery. Got a letter from my mother-in-law—says she's coming up to help me—think I'll withdraw.

Wednesday, Oct. 30.—P. Rousier Jenks, who has not yet decided how he will cast his vote and who has some influence with the sewer gang, struck me for a "red" party the general had in his charge; I to profit and loss. The Pamphlet Makers' Anti-Protective association brought me an iron-clad set of pledges to sign to-day; kicked on the fourth slide and I respectively intimated that he had 123 votes in his pocket—I signed. Suffered great mental distress over the action of the Steel Rail Layers' brotherhood. They wanted to know how I stood on the railroad commission and I did not know they stood, I was up a stump; hope I dodged the question successfully, but I doubt it. Was obliged to kiss Schwartzheimer's baby to-day; it smelled of Limberger, but I have his vote solid.

Butler's Challenge to Bayard. Washington Letter: I remember some years ago that Bayard made a savage attack on General Butler, in which he accused him of being the author of the "greenback" flat money. Someone sent a newspaper clipping containing the attack to General Butler, and the old man sat down and forwarded it to Mr. Bayard with an intimation that he "respectfully" referred to Thomas F. Bayard. I will compare my character and career, both public and private, with that of Mr. Bayard, his father or his grandfather, whenever and under whatever circumstances it shall please him.

"Did Mr. Bayard reply to the challenge?" "No, he did not," was the reply. "I don't know the facts in regard to the Bayard family the general had in his possession, but I do know that as he finished his indorsement he said with a particularly vicious gleam in his eye: 'There, by Heaven, let him take up that challenge if he dares.'

A Coat Stolen in Church. The two parties arrested Sunday evening for the larceny of a coat belonging to R. S. Richardson, from the Methodist church, were yesterday taken to the county jail to await a hearing.

One of the men, who gave his name as Charles Aull, objected very strongly to being arrested, and resisted Chief Luens. The chief was compelled to administer a dozen very severe chokings before he got his prisoner to the cooler, and the fellow then stripped off his coat and proposed to whip the whole force.

Junior Hendricks tripped his feet from under him so quickly that the floor hit him more than all the choking, and he began to cry and threatened to "tell his father." The man who was fighting like a demon. He was the toughest specimen that the "peelers" have had to handle for a long time. The story told by the other man, George Ferguson, is that he and Aull entered the church together, and Aull left his coat down stairs. Ferguson laid down his coat on an empty chair, and Aull took it when he went out. Ferguson did not notice it, and picked up Richardson's, supposing it to be his own. He evidently discovered his mistake(?) as he was endeavoring to pawn the coat for a drink of whisky at the "Marble Works" saloon when arrested. As the coat is valued at $17 the officers are satisfied Mr. Ferguson will go over the road. It is almost needless to say that Ferguson is in no way related to the well known family who lived here so many years.
