The residences of this city are to be renumbered again on account of the great irregularity in this respect, now noticeable in this respect. Owing to the peculiar manner in which the streets in the older portions of the city were laid out many of the numbers do not correspond at all to the location where they stand.

The New Bridge on Broadway.

The county supervisors completed their labors yesterday for the fall term and adjourned until the first Monday in January.

The forenoon was occupied in settling the claim of the Slevvers Bridge company, of Casakalosa, in regard to the present bridge on Broadway over Indian creek, and letting the contract for a new one.

The bid of the Milwaukee Bridge company, of this city, was the lowest for erecting the new structure, and the contract was awarded to them for $7,750.

The bill for the present bridge, including five per cent interest and costs, amounting to $149,066, was paid to Mr. Thomas Slevvers. The new structure will be sixty feet long and sixty feet wide. It will be made as strong as possible for a wagon bridge, and will weigh nearly 100,000 pounds.

It will be so arranged that the floor can be paved, making a continuous block paved drive. The bridge will be the full width of the street, so that it will offer no obstruction whatever to travel when the great thoroughfare is crowded, as it very frequently is. It will be erected as soon as it can be made, and in ninety days the public will probably be able to drive over the new structure.

A Friendly Farewell. There was a pleasant gathering last evening at the residence of Colonel D. B. Dailey, county prosecuting attorney, at 916 Indiana avenue.

The occasion was the presentation of two handsome gold-headed canes to the two retiring members of the board of county supervisors, Messrs. Samuel G. Underwood and James Holler. The mementoes were the gifts of the other county officials, with whom the above named gentlemen have been connected during their term of office.

The canes are elaborately engraved and suitably inscribed, and are very handsome testimonials of the high esteem in which the retiring members are held. The whole party sat down to a most princely spread, which varied ample justice. The evening was passed in friendly social intercourse, and will long be pleasantly remembered by those who were present.

The divorce case of Henry S. Terry vs. Matilda E. Terry was heard. J. W. Ross appeared for the plaintiff. There was no defense and the decree was granted as prayed for. The defendant is alleged to have skipped out for Vancouver's island with another man. The would-be husband also took three horses belonging to Terry, which were pastured a few miles from this city. Terry wrote to the woman asking for the custody of their two children. The reply informed him that he could have one, but the other had no Terry blood in his veins and would be kept by the mother. Although the woman and her paramour got away with three horses, it is claimed that she still has a horse on Terry.

She told whatever she wanted to say, and she was "peeled" and said the officer offered to let her go for $2, but she could not pay it, neither would she advance the amount, so she remained in the court, and she was accordingly removed to the "salty parlor" of the jail.

The first real snow storm of the season began about half past ten yesterday morning. The flakes fell quite rapidly for a short time and the ground was soon covered. During the afternoon the fall was quite light, and more outdoor business disagreeable, without materially increasing the depth of the snow on the ground. The fall melted about an inch, and made travel decidedly uncomfortable.

The boys appeared with their sleds at the first appearance of the snow, and patiently until enough had fallen to fit the sidewalks for iron runners. The snow came down just as naturally as last year, and will be on hand to furnish a white Christmas if necessary.

Putting Oil On the Water. Before the police went on duty last evening Chief Lucas called the entire force together to inquire into certain matters relative to its efficiency. The chief interviewed the following result. Said he: "I asked the boys if there was any dissatisfaction anywhere, and without exception they said there was not. I asked them if I had ever given them any occasion to think I had any 'pets,' and they said no; that all had been given an equal show in the work which falls into our hands, and that I had shown no disposition to discriminate against any of them. I am, of course," continued the chief, "so see how such a report could have been started, for surely there is no reason for it. When I took the office I gave strict orders in regard to drinking while on duty. This order has been generally obeyed. What few cases there have been have not interfered with the work, and the force in the least. I will have sober men and the boys know it. I must have discipline, and while I am at the head of the force will have it. If any of the boys are 'petted' he is at liberty to quit, for I have none. We are getting along nicely and the boys are all well. I will continue as long as I am chief."

A FRIGHTFUL FATE. San Francisco Examiner: O. S. Church, of the Grand hotel, is the owner of a large ranch in Sierra. He is handy with his gun, and is choicely full of reminiscences of his experience with big game in the mountains of Sierra. The other night he was in a remiss mood and, after observing that from present indications this was to be a great winter for bear and deer in Sierra, he said:

"The most horrible experience I ever knew a man to have with a grizzly was near the Sierra buttes, twelve miles from Sierra City, in the Goll Lick country. The man was Samuel Berry, famed in the north as an expert hunter and trapper. At odd periods he made his headquarters on the ranch of my father, A. D. Church, in the aforesaid county, great forked tree that had fallen in the storm, and just within the fork was a great hole in the snow that had been tramped down, as though a desperate struggle had occurred there. The snow was blood-stained, and the deep tracks of a man led out from it. A few feet away was one snowshoe and the pole which had been used between the legs to guide the long runners.

"Two rods below was a sight frightful to behold. Berry lay there stark and stiff in death, his body fearfully torn and the snow all about red with blood. He had come down the big canyon late in the afternoon, and as snowshoemen do when belated or exhilarated by the chance for a flying ride, had come at lightning speed. He had not noticed the wide-spreading forks of the tree, covered as the extremities were with snow, nor a great she-bear and her two cubs which were secluded there. He must have rushed right in among them.

"It is presumably that the bear being thus surprised made at him, for he had shot and wounded her. This, however, only enraged the bear more, and she followed him up. Berry lost one of his snowshoes, and the pole which guided the long runners.

"Worse than this, in the confusion he lost his gun, and thus he must stay and engage in a hand-to-hand conflict with the bear. Berry, from the looks of his body, must have been already wounded in the left thigh and severely in the arms.

"He drew his knife, the only weapon he had left, and fought nobly for his life, but he was no match for the bear, and he was killed.

"Below the crotch of the tree, where the body was found, the snow was again fearfully torn, and Berry, weak from loss of blood, had succumbed, and at the last moment his face was bitten off by the bear.

"It was the most desperate conflict I ever heard of, and strange to say, the story has never been told, yet all the old hunters of Sierra remember this as the most terrible battle with a wild animal that ever occurred in that section.

"You see, it was just the beginning of the solid part of the winter, and the old bear and cubs had sought this secluded place to hibernate. Probably they had been there for some days, and the old one was hungry and sulky at being disturbed, especially as she had the cubs.

"The tracks of the three led out in the snow, and along the tracks of the big one was a trail of blood, showing that once Berry had fought heroically for his life, but the odds were too heavy for him. Some of our party followed the trail of the bear until it was finally lost in the deeper snow below. Whether the old bear finally died from her wounds, of course, we could not know.

"Berry's gun was found near where he had first run to the bear, and the knife was still in his hand when his body was discovered.

"Henry Hines is the king of the bear-killers in Sierra county. Hines is an old-timer from away back. He gets on bear and deer than any other hunter up there. He is well equipped for the business, having plenty of good guns and blooded hunting dogs.
