The Two Evangelists.

The evangelists, Messrs, Smead and Smith are doing grand work in the interest of saving men. Comparatively little is known here concerning them, although their work during the past has been very wide spread and effective. Like all successful evangelists, they are both possessed of a strong personality, which impresses one forcibly either in personal contact or in their public work. Mr. Henry G. Smead is a Yankee, born and bred. He left Rhode Island, his native state, in 1876, coming to Minneapolis. Nine years ago he was converted, and feeling impressed with a special call to this work he immediately began it, but through the Y. M. C. A. He was connected with the work of this organization in Minnesona, Kansas, and also in Iowa. Five years ago he began work as an evangelist. In person he is below the average in build and weight, of a nervous temperament, and when deeply interested he rises to the stature of a giant almost. His contact is magnetic and he wins the heart of his auditor first and convinces him by his logical, matter of fact manner of stating bible truth afterward. His is not an eloquence which dazzles the intellect, but rather that which reaches the heart and conscience.

His associate is of a different type. Arthur J. Smith is a Canadian by birth, though his parents were born in the state of Maine. He was reared in the ODELL & BRYANT, 513 Main st. faith of the Protestant Episcopal church of England, and in this was ordained and licensed to preach by Bishop Paddock of Massachusetts. After the age of ten he lived with his parents in the state of Vermont. He was very early mpressed with the divine call, and set about preparing himself for the work. Like Mr. Smead he began with the Y. M. C. A. He was not a natural singer, then be made. The factory is now in but to render his work more effective he determined to develop what faculty he had. He entered the Boston conserva-

of music, and took a thorough ourse in voice culture. So successful were his efforts that few men in public to-day can equal Mr. Smith as a vocal-He is magnetic; renders his work with great intelligence, interpret-ing clearly and in a man-ner that wins his hearers. What would I do? Why I would ad-vertise for bids for a new plant at once, o be opened on the 2d day of February SS9, and the present company would be one of the bidders. Let the contract to the lowest bidder, and then if the bid company got left, and wanted to make a fight, let them fight it out with the new one to their heart's content. This city is different from all others in the state with two or three exceptions, in that the city owns the streets. The city was laid out and settled before the land came into market, and when it was finally granted by the government the land was deeded to Frank Street, in trust for the people, whonow own the street and always will, instead of abutting prop-erty owners. If the city sees fit to grant another charter it can do so, but I am positive that there will be no more exclusive franchises. I think that here-after the city will regulate the price of gas, which it could not do when the gas charter now in force was granted. If the old company desires to continue the manufacture of gas here it will have to do as well as other companies are willing to do. The gas question should not be allowed to interfere with electric lighting, which we ought to have, gas or no gas. It is claimed that we can get an incandescent lighting plant established here that will furnish sixteen-candle power lights, to run until 10 o'clock, for 50 cents per month, and until midnight for 75 cents per month. That is some thing that would be of benefit to the merchants and others, for business nouses and residences. But as far as the gas question is concerned, I know what I would do if I was mayor, but I shall not make any suggestions. I have looked up the law and the facts in the case and make my report to-morrow evening. The Council Bluffs Lumber Co. want you to try some of their coal.

charge of Mr. Mullin, who has bought out the yarn and manufactured goods now on hand, but the plant belongs to the syndicate. Mr. Mullin states that this is a splendid location, and that business is very good. A great many local orders are received for work, and the business is on a good paying basis. It is hardly probable in view of these facts that the enterprise will be allowed to die. It is expected that a transfer of some of the stock will allow the business to be conducted on a much larger scale

The Guards' New Armory.

The Dodge Light Guards moved from their old quarters in Bloom & Nixon's hall to their new armory in the Masonic temple Saturday evening. As soon as the new location is fitted up it will be the finest armory in the state. New gun cases are being made to adorn the main hall and new lockers will also be furnished for accoutrements. As soon as the armory is fitted up the company will purchase new equipments. The enrollment is constantly increasing and the boys will turn out a good sized company at the next encampment. The first drill in the new quarters will take place this evening, and all friends of the company are cornially invited to be present.

Repentance is not fear; it is not feeling nor conviction merely. All these are adjuncts to re-pentance. It is a "right about face." At the city council meeting this evening City Solicitor Holmes will submit a report on the question of repealing the gas ordinance, which was referred to him a short time ago. In conversation with a BEE representative on this subject yesterday, Mr. Holmes ex-pressed himself as follows: "This gas" question is one in which all of our citizens are doubtless interested, and on which nearly everybody takes occasion to comment and offer suggestions, although their only accurate knowledge of the facts in the case is that the present price of gas is too high. They talk very glibly about what ought to be done, and tell how to do it, without considering that all proceedings must be in accordance with law or they will not amount to anything. Now, then, I don't suppose that anybody knows just what ordinance this company is doing business under, and it is something that will have to be settled by the courts. I think that parts of both ordinances are in effect, out am of the opinion that the present franchise expires February 2, 1889. It is argued that the company has violated the terms of its charter and it should be forfeited. Now we will suppose that the council repeals the ordinance, which they have a perfect right to do. The gas company has a plant here, which cost them many thousands of dollars, and it is not to he supposed that they would give it up without a contest. The time of the expiration of the charter, even if it is not until the inexhaustible supplies of the great new bridge Mrs. Neals discovered that she had lost a diamond bracelet. Shortly after returinng to the hotel, Officer Mulin appeared in charge of a little negro lad, who had found the missing article in the street near the dummy depot, and was exhibiting it to his fellows when discovered by the policeman. An investigation revealed the owner. The lady was so thankful for the return of the bracelet that she had the youngster litted out with an entire new suit from head to foot and sent him on his way rejoicing. Money loaned at L. B. Crafts & Co.'s loan office, on furniture, pianos, horses, wagons, personal property of all kinds, other articles of value without and all removal. All business strictly confidential.

The Erstman Hose Team.

A number of those interested in forming a racing hose team met at No. 4 hose house on Saturday evening. C. M. Maynard was elected president, F. H. Guanella vice president, Charles Atwood secretary and William Connors treasurer. The meeting decided to adopt the rules and regulations of the Iowa Firemen's association for the government of the new organization, which was named the "Eiseman Hose Team of Council Bluffs." Messrs, Nicholson, Covalt and Maynard were appointed a committee to draft bylaws and report at the next meeting, to be held to-morrow evening, when a captain, assistant captain and manager will be elected, and arrangements made for the organization of another team.

Dr. C. C. Hazen, dentist, opera house block. The Harvard Annex. Harpers Bazar: This new school, which has already been much to many women, had its first home in an unpre tentious old brown wooden house in

Appian Way-a short street west of Harvard square, running from Brattle street northward to Garden street, in the plain old town of Cambridge, in the plain old state of Massachusetts. This was a private house, and part of it was occupied as a dwelling. The annex had but three rooms. They were used two as lecture rooms and one as library. The two lecture rooms were perfectly plain, both architecturaly and in fit-ting. The library, also plain, was used by the girls as a study and general meeting place. It had book cases full of books of reference, dictionaries in various languages, encyclopedias, including, of course, the "Encyclopedia Britannica," standard histories and numerous classically books in other departments. There was a rug, an ordin-ary library table, a few wicker chairs, some chintz-covered window seats, simple muslin curtains, and in one corner a little case or cabinet, on what our grandmothers called a "light stand." On this cabinet lay that which was, a it were, the only visible material link which bound the annex to the university. This was the book in which pupils wrote their answers for the books to be drawn from the college library. Near this book was a shelf. About one end was a card with the word "delivered," and here were the books brought in answer to orders. Above the other was a card with the word "returned," and there were books read and ready to be taken away. Here, to this corner, at noon each day, came a boy, who took the order book, and also the books that had been read. Later in the day he reappeared, put the order
