Another Flood.

Charles Crawford has been on a six weeks' spree and sobered up in the police station Sunday. The charge of "snakes" was entered in the register against him, but when arraigned he was very indignant that such an accusation was brought against him, and demanded that it be changed to "drunk." After some debate the judge relented, and the charge was changed according to Crawford's wishes. He pleaded guilty to this and was fined $7.50.

Wants Money for His Carpet. S. A. Orchard has brought suit in Justice Kroeger's court against the Junior Order of American Mechanics, of this city, to collect $130.00 on a bill of carpet sold to that association July 20, 1887. The order is said to be now extinct, but the names of those who were members at the last meeting, forty-eight in all, were secured, and those who are expected to pay. Many of these, however, were not members of the order at the time the carpets were bought, and object vigorously against paying any of the bill. It is claimed that the price asked for the carpets is too exorbitant, or the bill would have been paid long ago.

OMAHA'S NEEDS AND DEEDS.

Related by a Gentleman of Intelligence and Experience.

One of the most enthusiastic and best informed of Omaha's citizens speaks as follows:

"I consider the prospects of this city for this year unusually good. In the first place, the vexatious city hall question has been settled, and Omaha has escaped the stain of litigation. Had it been otherwise, the credit of the city would have been badly damaged in the eastern money markets. Next comes the postoffice, with an expenditure of $1,300,000 for its completion. This structure should be conveniently located. I regard the Love-Hausman and Landrock property the best for that purpose. It is near the business center, on the principal thoroughfare between Omaha and Fort Omaha, and is approached on five streets, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Harney, Howard and St. Mary's avenue. No other locality in the city can equal this.

"Draw a line on the north from Farnam or Douglas to Leavenworth, then the square, and on Eighteenth on the east to Twentieth or Twenty-fourth on the west with St. Mary's avenue for a diagonal, and you will have the future business center of Omaha.

"The business center of a city is where the settled and Omaha has escaped the stain of litigation. Had it been otherwise, the credit of the city would have been badly damaged in the eastern money markets. Next comes the postoffice, with an expenditure of $1,300,000 for its completion. This structure should be conveniently located. I regard the Love-Hausman and Landrock property the best for that purpose. It is near the business center, on the principal thoroughfare between Omaha and Fort Omaha, and is approached on five streets, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Harney, Howard and St. Mary's avenue. No other locality in the city can equal this.

"For this reason the postoffice should be located on the corner of Twentieth and Farnam, or Twentieth and Harney. In Chicago the board of trade, the postoffice and the Grand Pacific hotel are located on the corner of Twentieth and La Salle, and close by is the Rock Island passenger depot—every element of convenience in an informal set of streets, and still under the same ownership. Why not do this in Omaha?"

"Douglas, Sixteenth, West Farnam, and St. Mary's avenue will naturally be retail streets. So will lower Douglas, on account of the bridge. The wholesale district will naturally seek the neighborhood of the docks.

"The splendid crops of Nebraska last year have contributed to Omaha's wonderful growth. Here are the government estimates:

Corn	Bushels.	Acres.	Value.
1887	144,217,000	4,097,867	$31,727,740
1888	145,000,000	4,100,000	32,041,000
1889	157,000,000	4,100,000	43,750,000

"In addition, the Kansas crop of over 200,000,000 bushels, which we ought to share with Kansas City and Leavenworth, if Omaha had anything like adequate electric facilities. This ought to receive the attention of our board of trade, if that body has the capacity to handle the subject.

"Omaha has very few drawbacks, but they are serious. These are the want of united action among our business men, another is the want of a more adequate electric system, and the extensive and detailed publication of the legal proceedings in our courts.

"The first is easily remedied—when our business men treat each other as friends, and not with suspicion. Lend each other a helping hand, and the result on Omaha will be a surprise. As to the electric system, publish their names, so men can hold their noses, and women their skirts, when they pass by. As to the publication of legal proceedings, the want of united action among our business men, another is the want of a more adequate electric system, and the extensive and detailed publication of the legal proceedings in our courts.

"Whether in the palace of pure delight, described by the poet as a place of delight, they put flavoring in their pies, jellies, puddings, custards, etc., is not stated. Probably they did. But neither the orient, Europe or the United States has ever produced an article rivaling in delicacy of flavor and purity Van Duzer's fruit flavoring extracts, the bottles of which contain more than others. Long ago the first in general estimation, and deservedly so. Grocers everywhere sell them.

Notice to Master Plumbers. A state convention of the master plumbers of Nebraska will be held in this city on February 22 and 23, at the Murray hotel. Educational Notes. Superintendent James, in examining the weekly reports of the night schools of this city, in reply to rhetorical questions, replied that there were ten now in operation, a number having been suspended. The nightly attendance last week was 380. It required seventy-seven teachers to instruct the pupils, making an average of twenty-three pupils to a teacher. These schools, as a rule, run from four to five months in the year. Those now in operation will probably be discontinued at the close of the winter term.

Mr. James says that in the main these schools are composed of Slovaks, Bohemians and other foreigners from fourteen to twenty years of age who are desirous of learning to read and write the English language. "Believe," he said, "it is the most patriotic thing we can do to run these schools nightly for foreigners. It Americanizes them and that is just what we want to do with the foreign element. When they learn to read English they will read the American papers instead of papers in their own tongue and the country profits thereby."

Miss Patterson, of the Forest school, and Miss Brown, of the Webster school, are both detained at home from their posts on account of the mumps. Miss Shallenberger, of the Vinton school only recently recovered from the same jaw-racking ailment.

For Stealing Coal. John Covick, who would be an unusually handsome fellow if he were washed and better clad, was arraigned on the charge of stealing coal from the B. & M. railway company. After some trouble an interpreter was secured and Covick said that he had merely picked up the coal from the track.

His wife was sick, he had no fuel or money, and as Sunday was bitterly cold he had to do something to keep his family from freezing. Accordingly he picked up the chunks that had fallen from the heavily loaded cars. An employee of the company contradicted this story and says that he caught Covick stealing the coal and made him return it. His wife was once fined for the same offense and the judge mulcted him to the amount of $12.50.

OVERHEAD WIRES.

The Horse Car Company Wants a A rumor was about yesterday that an ordinance will be introduced in the council this evening granting permission to the horse car company to erect poles and string overhead wires along their lines so as to operate them with electricity.

Frank Murphy, president of the company, said that this was true, and that an ordinance granting the company such rights will be introduced in the council to-night. The company, he said, desired to keep in the lead, and that it would give its patrons electric service on its principal lines as soon as the council should see fit to grant permission to erect poles for the poles being dug.

Asked if he did not think that the electric motor would be the best for street transportation in the future, Mr. Murphy said that he did not; that in the first place, an enormous quantity of coal must be used, which has to be first generated into steam and then into electricity, which then had to be applied to the cars. With the cable motor it was different, the being turned directly into the motive power—steam.

Love and Dollars. Now South Omaha is the scene of a romance. Years ago a Missouri girl named William Gandy, adopted a little orphan girl named Alice Oblinger, and some time ago removed with his charge to the magic city. While there, she made the acquaintance of a young man named Albert Day, at that time employed by Z. C. Ogden, her foster-father, and removed to Central City. It was a case of love at first sight, and Albert struck out to make a home for them both while she remained at home with her foster-father.

Saturday, however, she received a letter from Germany telling of the death of a relative, in whom she counts almost as a son, and now there is joy in one South Omaha home. The fortune is a real one, as one of the heirs is already in possession of $50,000.
