"The Ark" to Be Closed.

It was suggested yesterday that the mayor would probably issue an order to close "The Ark," as two human beings had been shot down in cold blood within its walls, this being the course pursued after the murder of De Goode by Brooks at the "Bucket of Blood." It seems rather doubtful whether this method of closing the saloons and bawdy houses of the city will prove a success. It required one death to close the first place, and now there are two at the second. At this there are now fifty saloons and more than that number of houses of prostitution run-ning openly in the city. Whether the place is closed or not, the tragedy will doubtless have a wholesome effect on the lawless neighborhood in which it occurred. Complaints have been numerous for some time regarding the disgraceful orgics carried on there nightly, and it is hoped that the terri-ble deed of Friday night will serve as a check, temporarily at least.

The terrible double tragedy of Filday evening was the all-absorbing topic of con versation on the streets yesterday morning. and at an early hour a crowd began to gather in front of the undertaking rooms of Field & Estey, where the inquest over the remains of the suicide was to be held at 10 o'clock. They were refused admittance, but remained patiently outside, peering eagerly rate of increase it will require an enormous sacrifice before the round is complete, as through the windows, hoping to catch glimpse of the body of the murderer and suicide. About 8 o'clock two strangers called and asked to see the body, stating that they thought they knew the dead man. They were admitted, and recognized the corpse as that of Jack O'Brien, claiming to have known him for two years. They then disap-peared, and were not to be found when wanted by the police a couple of hours later.

Briefly it was as follows "I have known the dead man for a year and a half. I became acquainted with him at Fannie Doran's place, on North Ninth street, Fannie Doran's place, on North Ninth street, Omaha, about that time. His name was, John Nolan, but he went under the name of Jack O'Brien. His folks live at St. Joseph. He was a tough boy, but I never looked on him only as a young boy, and had no idea he would come to anything like this. He came over here a few days ago, and heard that I was at Miss Kittle's. He came there to see me. He was with two others, and thoy were all pretty tough. He came again Tuesday night, and I had to let him have a bed, because he wouldn't take any other answer. Miss Kittle came to me afteward and said she knew he was a crook, and told me he mustn't come there, as he and told me he mustn't come there, as he would get the house in trouble. He came a little after S o'clock last night and asked m to write a letter for him. I said I would and took him into the side room. He was and took him into the side room. He was crying, and told me his brother was snot and killed a night or two before in Minneapolis while robbing a jewelry store. He said he was going there, and would kill the man who shot his brother, even if he had to die too. I told him what Miss Kittle said about his coming. Then I herem to write for hem too. I told him what Miss Kittle said about his coming. Then I began to write for him. He told me what to write. It was this: 'Dear Mother, Father and Sisters-I write this to let you know where I am.' Just then Miss Kittle came in and asked us to go out to the parlor, He refused to go, and she had to ask him five or six times. We went out, and I was just

He refused to go, and she had to ask him five or six times. We went out, and I was just ready to go with the letter, when he said: 'Write "dead" at the top of the sheet.' I told him if he wanted anything like that to write it himself. Then he said he wanted to see Miss Kittle, and she came in. She must have heard him ask for her. As soon as she came in he pulled his gun out of his hip pocket and shot her, then he shot himself. He didn't say a word to her as she came in, but just fired. "The address he gave for the letter was John Noland, St. Joseph. He was very drunk, and told me that he had been dead drunk all day. He said somebody about the house had wronged him, and he was going to get even. He said they had put the cops on to him, and if he died they would die too. I think he was just crazy, because his brother died and he felt awful bad about it. Then he was drunk, and he thought Miss Kittle had put the police after him, and wnen she wanted him to move, he just made up his mind to kill her. It's a wonder he didn't shoot when she asked him to go out to the parlor."

parlor." Later she told a BEE reporter that she knew about the watch that Lottie bought of the dead man. When Lottie fainted, she grabbed the watch and threw it out of the window, but when they looked for it after-wards they could not find it. She stated that the report that Noland had been in the penitentiary was false. Said she, "He told me last summer that he was sixteen years old, so he must be seventeen now." She also stated that he was well known to the Omaha police. The two men who identified the remains yesterday morning are the ones who accom-quantities to dispose of, as at the time the watch was sold. It transpired yesterday that Ralph Pontius, a newsboy, sold the deceased a copy of the Dispatch at the corner of Maine street and Fifth avenue early Friday evening, and he then said he was going to kill him-self, and gave the name of John Neoulds. He had a handfull of small change, and the boy said, "If you are going to kill yourself, yop won't need all that money, and had bet-ter give it to me." The man then gave him an extra dime. The paper was found in his pocket after the tragedy. The coroner's jury, consisting of H. E. Grimm, F. L. Hayden and O. H. Lucas, re-turned a verdict to the effect that the de-ceased came to his death by a shot fired from a deadly weapon with his own hand and with suicidal intent. and with suicidal intent. The remains of the suicide still he at the undertaker's. The doors were thrown open at noon and several hundred people viewed the body, but none of them recognized it. Coroner Waterman telegraphed to the sup-posed relatives in St. Joe, and will hold the remains for two days awaiting a reply as to what disposition to make of them. There was nothing in the pockets but 20 cents in money, a pocket glass, chisel and cartridge.
