BLAZING RAGS.

Samuel Kline's Junk Shop Destroyed By Fire.

A two-story frame building on Jones street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, belonging to John M. Mulvihill, was destroyed by fire at 1 o'clock this morning.

The fire was caused, it is claimed, by an incendiary.

Shortly after 12:30 o'clock the sparks of the smouldering old rags were fanned into a blaze, and it was not long before the front of the structure was in flames.

An alarm of fire was turned in from Thirteenth and Jackson streets. The fire department fought the flames, and within half an hour it was thought that the fire was about subdued, but it was not. It broke out in other spots and then the roof of the building went up in smoke.

On either side of the frame structure is a large barn. Adjoining it on the east is the frame stable of the German cracker factory, which contained a number of horses.

On the west is the stable belonging to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing association. Horses and wagons from both stables were rushed out, and the fire department worked so industriously that neither building was damaged.

Kline, the proprietor of the rag shop, was much excited and wanted everything dropped to arrest the man who set fire to his rags. He claims that he had several thousand dollars worth of rubber, copper and old rags stored in the building. His insurance, he says, is between $30 and $100.

The entire loss of the building and its contents is estimated at $1,000.
