ONLY WANT TO BE CLERKS.

The Modesty of Women Who Seek Offices at Washington.

MRS.J. ELLEN FOSTER'S HUSBAND

His Wife Wants Him Appointed on the Inter-State Commerce Commission-F. A. P. G. Clarkson and the Lady Applicants.

The Diffidence of the Sex. WASHINGTON, May 25 .- [Special to THE BEE. ]-There probably never were so many women seeking office in Washington as now. They never aim high. So far as is generally known no woman has asked for a position above a cierkship. Most of them apply for places through the civil service commission, and their ambition is about the size of a first class clerkship, which pays $1,000 a year. Most of them are school girls, and want places below the classified list-the position of copyist being the popular one.

Before the civil service law was on the statute books, and governed the employment of men and women in the various branches of the government, it was not an unusual thing for a woman of great political power to demand a managerial position They frequently ask to be appointed chiefs of division in the departments, and there are cases on record where women made long and forceful fights for the positions of disbursing and pay offices, places requiring heavy bonds and entailing heavy responsibilities. There are none of those contests

The Cleveland administration set the ex smple of giving preference in the employ-ment of cierks and copyists to males. Dur-ing the last two years of the Cleveland administration scarcely a woman was employed in any of the departments to do clerical work. Those who did get places now are al most exclusively the widows or orphans o ex-union soldiers. The government printing office and the bureau of engraving and print ing furnish places for the greatest number of women now employed. When Superintend-ent Porter opened the census bureau, a few weeks ago, he was beseiged with members of the gentler sox who wanted places, and at times in the day his office looked like a reception for a woman's christian temperance union, or some organization of that character, Mr. Porter showed the women all due con-sideration, and when he had places to give tendered them to women who were capable and deserving, and who could fill them as well as men.
Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of Iowa, the noted

orator who took such an active part in the last campaign for General Harrison, has cut a more prominent figure in the circle of of-fice-seekers than and other woman in Washington since the 4th of March last. She does not seek a place for herself, but wants her husnd given the vacancy on the inter-state mmerce commission. Mrs. Foster is very commerce commission. Mrs. Foster is very shrewd, and for awhile conducted a "still hunt' with as great a degree of success as any man. She is not confident that her husband will by given preference, however. President Harrison is called upon daily by women of all classes, in the single number and by delegations, but they almost invariably ask for moderate places. The women who have official ambition have come to the conclusion that success lies only in moderation. At the civil service headquarters it is said that in some of the states a majority of the applicants for offices who are certified and are eligible for appointment are women. In a few instances women registered and certified for appointment have been selected under the belief that they were men, and the officers in the department calling for clerks have been surprised to find a woman walk in and present her appointment when a man was expected to appear. It is safe to predict that the number of women now employed in the department will steadily de crease, as men are always preterred. The women want more leaves of absence with pay, and require more attention than the men, and that is why the superior officers prefer the male sex as clerks. There has been a steady diminution of the number of females employed in the pension office during the past three or four years, and at is rare that one is now given a position. In this branch of the government judgment is the primary qualification, and few women can be trusted to look into a case involving

Every day one sees a goodly number of women in the crowd which flocks about the room of First Assistant Poetmaster-General Clarkson. Most of these women come from clarkson. Most of these women come from a distance—in some instances a thousand miles—and they seek appointments as post-mistresses. Mr. Clarkson has appointed a large number of them, but he always requires the regular political endorsements as to qualification and merit, and the widows or contents of ex-mion soldies are selected in orphans of ex-union soldies are selected in almost every instance. A number of stories have gone the rounds detailing how women have presented themselves before Mr. Clarkson, and by their winsome ways and Clarkson, and by their winsome ways and glib tongues have secured appointments, but the very capable and business-like assistant general says they are romances founded upon fiction, and that wherever he has made the appointment of a woman it can be shown that she was endorsed as strongly as a man would have been had the appointment gone to the opposite sex.

The last prominent office-seeking incident on the part of a womar was conducted dur-ing the last administration by Mrs. V. C. Thompson who wanted to be postmistress at Thompson who wanted to be postmistress at Louisville, Ky. She swept everything and everybody before her. She came here, stop-ped at the Ebbitt house, and by her strikingly handsome appearance and winsome manners made the senators and representatives not only from her state but others do her biddiag, and won a victory which split the demo-cratic party in Kentucky, and threatened to turn the state over to the republicans. She is expected to come here again soon, and set an example for representatives of her sex to follow. She is the most successful office-secker that has been in Washington for many

Just now Public Printer Palmer has more calls from women who want places than all of the other officials combined. He says they cause him more trouble than all the men, as they are persistent, and in most in stances deserving.

This moraing the people who were passing about the department of justice saw a tall, well formed, and strikingly handsome young man is the building take the elevator and man in the building take the elevator and ask to be shown to Attorney-General Miller's room. His heavy brown hair hung in ringlets upon a broad expanse of forehead. He was tastefully dressed, and on the lapel of his coat wore the emblem of the Beta Theta Pi society. His dark blue eyes were set with heavy lashes, and they flashed intelligence at every turn. This young man is an applicant for the position of United States marshal of Mississippi, and connected with marshal of Mississippi, and connected with him and his family is a story which, if writ-ten in detail, would rival the raciest tragedy ten in detail, would rival the raciest tragedy ever put between yellow covers.

Readers of political annals will remember that when the returns were flashed over the wires from the election in Mississippi in the fall of 1885, a startling tragedy was related from Hazelburst, Among the most intelligent and courageous of the republican leaders in the Hazelburst section of Mississippi was Print Matthews. He was a man of education, culture, and had the courage of his convictions. He was progressive, and believed in all of the essential elements of the republican party as against the the republican party as against the methods of the democratic party which had made the south solid, and which had made the south solid, and which terrorized white men as well as black men at the polis. Matthews, a short time before the election, was given warning by the democratic bulldozers—"the leading men of the county"—that if he attempted to vote on election day it would cost him his life. On the morning of the election one of his friends went to him and begged of him not to cast his vote on that day, saying that it would cost him his life, as it was pre-arranged and had been planned for many weeks that he (Matthews) should be made an example of.

weeks that he (Matthews) should be made an example of.

"Hut I am an American citizen," said Matthews calmly, "and having the right of franchise intend to exercise it. If there must be an example made of some one I presume I am no better than other citizens, and may as well bite the dust as any man."

Print Matthews impressed his friend with the fact that be did not intend to be a braggadock, but that he had the patriotism, good citizenship and courage to establish the rights of American citizens in any part of the country, even at the cost of halfe. An hour or two afterward Matthews advanced to the polls. A friend handed him a straight republican ticket, folded so as to not disclest its character. Matthews opened it, however, and, holding it by the end, handed it to the of the judges, who took the ballot in such a way that every one who stood near could read it. At that instant a democratic inspector, at a distance of eighteen feet, leveled a tor, at a distance of eighteen feet, leveled a double-barrelled shotgun at him and fired. Over forty buck-shot entered Matthews' body. It almost cut him in twain.

The brutality of the buildozers did not end here. The lifeless body was permitted to lie in the room where it fell, but the door was locked. Instantly the news of the tragedy was hirled throughout Hazelburst, and when it renched the home of Matthews, an invalid daughter, who had been confined to her bed for some time, started out to see the result of the report of the gun shot. She said she knew by intuition that her father was killed. She was refused admittance to the room where Matthews was confined, but a relative burst the door open and admitted her. The murderer marched around town all day with his shot gun and defied interfer-ence. As a reward he was elected mayor of the city

The young man described above as applying for the position of United States marsha is the son of Print Matthews, and although a young man he has a history which will bear favorable comparison with that of his father. OUR OVERWORKED CONGRESSMEN.

The trials and tribulations of the congressmen who have staid in Washington since the adjournment of congress to look after appointments are little known outside the circle of their immediate friends, who see them racing about the government departments during the day and, after office hours, drauging the man and after office hours, dragging themselves homeward, only to meet a mail of one or two hundred letters daily, which they iaboriously open and answer. This work usually keeps them up until the small hours, yet constituents who have a vote to cast one or two years hence must not be slighted.

Your correspondent found one of these truly hard-worked men at his desk the other evening. The member's whole appearance showed fatigue, his collar had wilted from the heat of the little office which formed his sanctum, his hair was dishevelled, and he looked like the last rose of summer, wilted and about to fall apart. Strewn about the room were stacks of pamphlets, comprising a variety of congressional documents that were yet to be distributed throughout his distributed while the dest was riled un for district, while the desk was piled up for a couple of feet with letters, those unanswered only, the communications that had been dispatched being deposited in a rough box that occupied one corner of the room. Over this heap of mail peered the countenance of the attentive secretary, who with the mystic aid of the cabalistic shorthand, put down the words of the working ember which were to form the substance of the answers.

"This is the most disheartening work that man ever engaged in said the fagged-out congressman as he leaned back for a mo-ment's rest. "It would make no difference, or at least there would be some resompense if this miserable work I am doing amounted to anything. But it does not. People in the states have an exaggerated idea of the influence of a congressman. They hear or some one who has been given a place and they think their own failure to get in office simply means the indifference of their member. I am receiving daily, scores of applications for places. These are in many instances accom-panied by letters from influential friends of the candidates. In each one I have to acknowledge the receipt of the communication and then write an endorsement to ac company it when I file it at the department of course I have in most cases to do this per-sonally, to make my little speech before the particular official who hundles the applica-particular official who handles the applica-tion, so that I may write my correspondent the facts to impress upon him my good will and the effort I make to get him fixed. "But what does all this labor signify? Nothing. I will tell you candidly, that of the hundreds of applications I have filed, I bave not had one appointment to repay me for my trouble. If this work did anybody any good I wouldn't complain, but it is sense-less and disheartening."

Of course now and then a plum does drop into the hands of the working members, and many of them fall to those who have strong influence with the administration, but as a rule the applications that are filed might as well be buried without hope of a resurrection even when the final trumpet blows.

Using Them for Fifty Years.

"ARKANSAW, Pepin Co., Wis., Dec. 2, 1885. For upwards of fifty years I have used BRANDRETH'S PILLS. I am now nearly eighty years old and in good health. That my fac ulties are still intact is due to this fact, and this only, that I have almost rejied on BRANDRETH'S PILLS, to the exclusion of stronger medicines to restore me to health whenever seriously indisposed or in great suffering from colds, backache, etc., and am deeply grateful, next to my Maker, to the blessed man who originated and placed within reach of his fellow-beings so simple and efficacious a remedy. For bilious derangements and kidney disturbances, their usefulness, in my experience, is particularly

The Business Situation.

Boston Advertiser: The spmewhat unsatisfactory condition of the trade movement is reflected in the continued duliness of the money market. This is especially the case in Boston, where the managers of banks and other monetary institutions are agreed upon the statement that rarely, if ever, have they known the demand for money to be so contracted in scope and so limited in amount. While this stagnant condition of the money market may be but temporary, yet the story it tells can not be mistaken. It means a sluggish condition of general business, and shows the prevalence of a disposition to wait until the favorable prospects of the future are assured.

A feature of interest in the exchange market has been the renewal of gold shipments to Europe. On Saturday nearly $4,000,000 of gold was taken by the outgoing steamers, with practically no change in the market rates for sterling bills. These shipments have been rendered necessary from the fact that commercial bills and security bills have almost entirely disappeared from the market. almost entirely disappeared from the market, and as the leading bankers have been and are drawing exchange freely, the gold has to be sent to meet the drafts, which can no longer be covered by swapping bills. There is, how-ever, no occasion for nervousness on this account, as the country can well spare the gold without inconvenience. It is the easiest and cheapest way to pay our indebtedness at this time, and, in fact, it may be said that no gold is ever sent abroad until it becomes the cheapest medium through which our balances can be settled.

But while general trade is dull, it is disappointing chiefly from the fact that it shows so little tendency to expand. It still remains moderately active, but the demand continues to be of a very conservative character, and is limited largely to supplying present wants rather than to anticipating the requirements of the future. In some departments of business values have shown a downward tendency, and any feeling of uncertainty as to whether prices may so lower always tends to restrict activity, as buyers are not disposed to stock up freely when there is a chance for a further decline. The good crop prospects have unsettled the tone of the market for wheat and corn. Iron and steel and the other metals are still laboring under a cloud of uncertainty, while hides and can be settled. a cloud of uncertainty, while hides and leather continue to be more or less depressed. The position of the wool trade also is not altogether satisfactory, the demand for con-sumption being sluggish and uncertain, while the new slip is held firm and so much above the market as to retard buying.

A writer in the Missionary Recorder in describing the Tai Shan mountain (in Shantung, much resorted to by pilgrims), says that among other attrac-tions is the mummy of an old Taoist, who died in the reign of Chien Lung (1735)-1796 set up as an object of reverence. This desiccated corpse is set on a pedestal, as are idols generally in a a pedestal, as are idols generally in a sitting posture, with legs crossed and hands together. Over his skull has been fitted a plaster mask painted in the very red and very white Chinese fashion, in which glass eyes have been set; a yellow silk robe hangs loosely from his bony shoulders, leaving exposed, however, the withered 56 272 120 4.1734 4.

arms and legs. A more gruesome, ghastly object it would be difficult to conceive. He is referred to by the plebs as the "Dried-Up Taoist," but when seeking admitthe venerable immortal. The writer inquired of the attending priest: "How inquired of the attending priest: ' long since his death? He replied: "He was transformed in the time of Ch'ien Lung. His spirit left him while he was in a sitting posture, and he had neither ache nor pain, being fully convinced that he was not dying, but being
