THE MOGULS' AGREEMENT.

Days When Grasshoppers Ruled and Ruined the Prairies of Nebraska.

The Presidents' Agreement. That the railway presidents' organization will in no way accomplish the purpose for which it was created is now generally admitted by rallway men. The organization was instituted in January and is considered to have already proved a monumental fail-explanation was shattered to the very foun-dation. When next heard from, Mr. Adams was taking steps preparatory to the forming of an organization of railway presidents. This, with the assistance of officials of his men state that the august body will soon be dissolved.

Wallace F. Walker, the chairman of the milway presidents' organization, will be a white elephant on the hands of the railway white elephant on the hands of the railway presidents in case of a collapse. Mr. Walker was fully cognizant of the uncertainty of the ownership of the "bird in the bush," and secured a contract guaranteeing him three years' employment as chairman of that body at the inviting salary of $25,000-per year. Hence Mr. Walker will draw his perquisite for three years regardless of the organization.

organization. Present indications point to a change in the executive office of the Brotherhood of Lecomotive Engineers, and that, too, at an early date. That Chief Arthur has long since ceased to be the popular favorite is openly ad-mitted by local members of the brotherhood, who in speaking claim to express the sentiments of a very large contingent of that body of strong-minded mind. The con-servative policy of Chief Arthur in the adju-dication of the great Burlington strike is viewed by those who have since taken a stand against his re-election as an element of con-stitutional weakness, and they hold that his attitude toward striking is the result of the attitude toward striking is the result of the absence of vindictiveness rather than that of policy, and that he would allow the order to be encroached upon without offering any re-sentment. Upon these grounds the opposition hope to compass his defeat at the coming annual election.

"I am somewhat restrained in speaking of "I am somewhat restrained in speaking of the grasshopper plague which visited Ne-braska and Kansas in 1875," remarked Colonel John Lichtenberger of the Union Pacific, "lest people might draw the conclu-sion that I was prevaricating. But it was an awful sight at best. Why, those big green fellows were hopping around by the millions and sweet event form of verticition green fellows were hopping around by the millions and swept every form of vegetation from the face of the earth in the territory they visited. Talk about grasshoppers, I have seen them piled up against the sides of buildings to the depth of several feet. They were so thick at one time that trains were stalled on the road. They ate up everything excepting the train crew, and even went so far as to beat a ride on Conductor Bare's train. "Yes," chimed in 'Car Accountant Buckingham, "they spit corn julice over the numbers and brands on the cars so that we used several cars belonging to the Chica-

Several roads refused to enter the combine. The policy of Mr. Adams was to force membership. The result is now being felt. The Canadian Pacific, the "Soo," the Burlington & Northern, and the Chicago & Alton are doing work in the line or rate-making that upsets, not only the presidents' organization, but every order of like charac-ter. The Alton is a party to the agreement, but the indications are that it will not re-main much longer. Conservative railroad men state that the august body will soon be

TO OBLIGE THE GOVERNOR.

A Hanging Date Changed to Harmonize With Hisbocial Arrangements.

There is a well-authenticated old story of a governor at one of our penal settlements, who, having fixed the date when two of his convicts were to be hanged for stealing, remembered, a few days before the date named for the execution, that he had an important social engagement for that same afternoon. He sent for the men and explained to them his difficulty, writes General Wolseley in the Fortnightly Review. "It cannot matter much to you," said he, "whether you are hanged on Tuesday or Wednesday next. It is, how-ever, a matter of some moment to me, and you would greatly oblige me if you would consent to be hanged on Tuesday instead of Wednesday, as named in the Gazettee." The men were inclined to stand on their rights, so he told them to think over the matter. They came to him the next morning and agreed to his wish on certain terms, which no readily accepted. The conditions were so much rum and so much tobacco for each day previous to their execution. A few days thus rendered happy were better to them than one more day of dreary existence on prison fare.

A Man of Many Diamond .

A tall, slenderly built young man, with a slight mustache, is ----, a well-known man about town, who is always to be found with about a quarter of a million dollars' worth of diamonds in his clothes, says the Philadelphia Record. He is what is known as a confidential salesman for a big diamond house in this city, and his samples he caprics stowed about his person. In his business capacity he visits wealthy pro-ple in all parts of the country, who are thought to be inclined toward large purchases, and frequently he makes trips to Europe with the same object. I saw him the other night shortly after his return from San Francisco. He was at one of the swell hotels in answer to a summons from a California couple, whose daughter, about to be married, also accompanied them. They wanted a suitable wedding present for their child. The diamond man took package after package from one pocket and another, and spread necklaces, brooches and solitaires on the table until it was almost covered and seemed ablaze with variegated lights.
