

A DULL AND LISTLESS GAME

Was That Played at the Ball Park
Yesterday Afternoon.

OMAHA TOOK IT WITH EASE.

Umpire Clark Brutally Assailed at Sioux City—The Bicycle Race
at the Coliseum—Sporting Notes.

Omaha 9, Milwaukee 3.

Yesterday was the one hundredth anniversary of Ezra Sutton's birthday, and he commemorated the occasion by taking his team of lumbermen out to the ball park and going through the formality of a game of ball with the Omahas. Ezra was plumped and belted for a sanguinary battle, but he came back up town in the evening looking as though he had passed through a rigorous winter.

In sooth, the game was one of the longest, most listless and uninteresting of any played on the home grounds this season.

Everybody was glad when it was over, even the small boy who got in on a ball over the fence.

The Milwaukees were as childlike and pliable as a lot of country bumpkins going to Sunday school, while the Omahas went about their work with no more spirit than a lot of street-car horses.

Two teams of saddle-rocks would have created no excitement.

Sam Crooks never once opened his yap, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enormous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut, thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enormous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

The first run was made in the third inning.

Willie was the lucky man.

He got his base on an error by big enor-

mous Billie, and was soon on Charlie's cut,

thorn on a neat seat, and home while Lowe, Griffith, Morrissey and two or three other old haymakers were running Cooney down between first and second.

Billie, however, added another to the total—making two.

Two more taffies were made, and the grand stand gave forth no more sound than the grave.

<p