A reporter called on C. H. Potter, the United States engineer, who has had charge of the river improvement at this place.

Mr. Potter was then informed about the contents of the communication.

MILITARY GOES TO IOWA. They Will Camp with the Militia in August.

Some time ago Governor Larrabee, on the suggestion of General Alexander, adjutant general of the National Guard, directed the major-general commanding the army requesting a detail of one company of the United States troops at Fort Omaha to go in camp with the Iowa regiments.

The available force, General Brock says, will be ten companies of thirty-five men each. What distribution will be made will not be known until the plans have matured.

General Alexander, who is in Omaha yesterday, speaking about the matter he said: "It has been the custom for some years to send a regular officer to inspect the camps and make a report of their condition and work. It occurred to me that it would be a good idea to have a company of regulars and make the report. Our guard is divided into two brigades, but we have six camps."

First Lieutenant Harry H. Wright, Ninth cavalry, Fort Robinson, near Ft. Ladd, of the same regiment and fort, have been selected to represent their regiment in the cavalry competition which takes place at Fort Leavenworth, Mo., on August 6.

use fifty-two dozen of lemons and three dozen bunches of mint. At many bars the lemon and lime juice is bought by the bottle, but there is nothing like preparing it yourself from the fresh fruit.

"Billey" Florence came in one day and said he wanted something new.

"Get out a sherry glass," he ejaculated. "I have a notion of drinking."

"I did as directed and under his tutelage mixed orange bitters, whisky and water in equal proportion. This was poured into a sherry glass and soon gurgled down the throat of the com-edy writer, who put the glass on the table and said he wished his neck was as long as a giraffe's.

"Gin fizz" holds its own against the march of modern improvement. To the juice of two lemons sugar is added, then a measure of gin. This is well shaken and strained and the "fizz" water is poured in from the syphon.

"Gin fizz" is made by adding the white of an egg. A "whisky daisy" is made just as gin fizz, with the exception of using raspberry syrup and lime instead of lemon juice.

Another old favorite is port wine "sangaree." The whites and yolks of two eggs are separated, and each beaten up with sugar. The whites are then poured into a cocktail glass, filled with port and pour in the liquor. Creme de cassia is made from cassia buds, and is drunk in the same manner.

Beer must not be forgotten. Ten years ago not a barkeeper in a New York hotel would serve the amber fluid. But now they all do it, and even the Fifth Avenue hotel bar is soon to be ornamented with a silver faucet from which the "nut-brown" can be drawn.

COOL THROAT TICKLERS. An Expert on the Art of Mixing Summer Drinks.

Only last night five men stepped up before me and silently removing their hats, mopped their sweating brows and then assumed the attitudes common to men who frequent bar-rooms in the uncluttered, unshaven, but well-furnished, bar of a New York bartender, in the Morning Journal, of that city.

That I staggered me for an instant. I knew that they wanted what is generally known as a summer drink. They were warm and so needed something cooling. Of necessity I would have to use ice and lemon juice, some fruit, perhaps in mixing the drink, but to tell the truth, I had never heard of a "booz-wig."

Mechanically I put five glasses before them, filled with cracked ice, and began to juggle with the tools under the bar. One of the gentlemen asked me to be a little kinder in my answer, arising from indignation that I had refused to take him in for a partner, and in the progress of their conversation confessed that soap-faking was not his only hold, but that he could pick pockets with neatness and dispatch, and in case of a pinch would not hesitate to use a burglar's outfit.
