SUNDAY NEWS IN THE BLUFFS

The Guards Start For Camp Amid Trials and Tribulations. More Money Needed to Carry It Through to a Successful Issue—Relics of a Third of a Century.

The Guards Go to Camp. Yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock the Dodge Light Guards met at the armory to prepare for their departure for the encampment.

The boys were in high feather over the prospect of once more being able to appear in public in a beautiful uniform.

The names of the wearers were written upon slips of paper which were pinned to pants, coats and helmets. This was to avoid confusion and hasten the donning when the time came for their departure to camp.

Tramp, tramp, tramp the boys came marching, sang Dixie, while Woodbury warbled a snatch from "Senovita."

Suddenly Compton walked in from a side room holding his pants as high as he could reach to keep the legs from dragging on the floor.

At the same time Atchison appeared in pants that barely covered his knees. This was the signal for a general outpouring of half-clad forms partially concealed in ill fitting coats and pants.

A volume of special epithets was brought in to the boys and they mightily expressed the thoughts that came all too fast for utterance in common English.

E. J. Woodbury worked himself into a state of violent perspiration as he tugged fruitlessly trying to make his elongated under-pinning conform to a pair of trousers cut out for a female.

Leutenant, who had been so helplessly engulfed and almost smothered in another pair of unmentionables, should have borne the name of C. E. Parsons.

Parsons was early trying to shove himself into a double-entry garment that would have been sufficiently ample for an ordinary sized individual, but he could not establish himself so as to feel at home.

Falstaff's recruits were beauties compared to the Light Guards in their combination of dress, undress and too much dress.

When the boys had cursed themselves sufficiently they felt to laughing at each other. Finally they regarded their clothes and then it dawned upon them that some fiend without the fear of man or future punishment before his eyes had gained entrance to the hall in their absence and changed the tags upon all their clothes.

It was nearly 6 o'clock when they set to work picking their own suits out of the incongruous mass. The train was to leave at 6:40 o'clock, and this added to the wild desire to appear at their best when they marched to the train, did not help matters any.

The boys worked hard to unravel the tangled uniforms, but with little success, and when they went to the train, the admired of thousands, very few knew the fabled canon that was hanging at their vitals or why several pairs of pants were folded up carefully half way to the knees.

While others were struggling down altogether too tight for beauty or comfort, several men did not appear in line. They had not even succeeded in getting themselves in shape to appear in public, and with their new garments under their arms, they had eluded the rude gaze of a critical crowd by going through the alleys to the depot.

However, when the train started all the boys were on board. When they appear for inspection to-day this explanation may account for any and every blight otherwise be charged to the tailor.

A reward has been offered for the discovery of the fiend who changed the tags. When they finally managed to establish their identity, after getting seated in the cars, it was found that the following members of the company had survived the disaster and were going to camp: First Lieutenant Atchison, Second Lieutenant Dixon, Sergeants McNeal, Compton, Wells, Babby and Barrett, Corporals Finley and Parsons, Musician Bennett, Privates Armstrong, Fleming, L. Knotts, C. E. Parsons, C. J. Patterson, Thompson, Thomas, Wallace, Bert Williams, C. E. Woodbury, E. J. Woodbury, G. S. Treynor, Ross, Ellis, Dotany, Rowe, Foster, Mitten, Gable, Coon, Fizzgerald, Reedy, V. S. Treynor, Young, DeLong, Bailey, Stephenson, Dale, Goss, Nison, Heft, Murphy, Martin.

"Nigger Bill," the irrepressible one, who has never failed to attend an encampment with the guards, was on hand with a most gorgeous uniform. He goes to keep the boys' eyes from reflecting the approving glances of the susceptible belles of Red Oak.

Altogether it was a great company which went out of the Bluffs last evening on No. 6 over the Burlington. It was a noticeable fact that few of the old members are going, and their places are filled with recruits, for which reason it is too much to expect the company will make a better showing than they did last year.

Church Notes. The cool and delightful August weather yesterday gave the church goers no excuse for remaining away from divine services, and the consequence was that the attendance in all the churches was larger than is usual on a sultry August Sabbath.

At the First Baptist church the regular morning services were conducted in the presence of a large congregation. Dr. Cooley, the pastor, preached an inspiring sermon on the character of Saul, the first king of Israel.

At the Heron Baptist church the pastor, Rev. T. P. Thickstun, addressed a large audience, in which were many young people. This is the new Baptist church that has recently been erected in the western part of the city.

Although but three months since it was dedicated, the church has become a strong organization and is a great moral support to the rapidly growing western part of the city.

Rev. Dr. Phelps conducted the services at the Second Presbyterian church at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Rev. J. W. Cathcart, of Emerson, Ia., had been called to this charge, and it was accordingly expected he would accept the work.

The organization, however, was so young and the largest salary it could give so small that Mr. Cathcart was compelled to reluctantly decline the call, for the reason that it would not afford the necessary means to support his family. Until the pulpit is filled, Dr. Phelps will be supplied and he will thus increase its popularity.

on "God's Holiness." He remarked in opening that he had never heard a sermon preached on this subject and had never preached one himself, yet it was one of the most important ones in the whole realm of religious thought.

City steam laundry, 34 Main, tel. 141. Relics of Bygone Years. Workmen engaged in excavating for the rear wall of the new Sapp block Saturday unearthed several logs and an old stump about ten feet below the surface of the ground.

The bed of Indian creek was located there at one time, and it is stated that there was a foot bridge at that point. At a depth of eighteen feet a load of hay was found, and what is quite remarkable, it was evidently in the same state as when dumped there over thirty years ago.

It was apparently a load of rotten, musty hay, that had been dumped there simply to get rid of it, as in former years the place was used as a public dump where all refuse was deposited.

The hay was perfectly dry, although but a few feet from the present bed of the creek, while a few feet to the other side numerous loads of manure were found saturated with moisture.

The old bed of the creek was filled up years ago, and the course changed to its present location. The logs and hay have been buried there over thirty years, and some of the oldest citizens say that the place has been covered up for over a third of a century.

The excavation is being made so deep in order to get a solid foundation for the walls of the new block, and the workmen have to go below the bed of the creek, where they have struck a solid blue clay. The foundation will rest on a bed of broken stone and Portland cement, which will give a support that will last as long as the structure above it.

Instead of doing this it was proposed to drive piling upon which to place the foundation, but the difficulty experienced with the adjoining walls induced the belief that the jar of driving piling would result in tumbling the entire structure to the ground. Even in the present state of affairs, it is asserted that Contractor Hughes will come out at the small end of the horn, as he gave a bond to protect Mr. Sapp from any damage done to adjoining property on account of excavating for the building.

It was the intent to demolish the adjoining walls so as to hold them firmly in position, but the plan was not successful, and suits for several hundred dollars damages are among the probabilities of the near future.

SEEING IS BELIEVING

One can never judge of wine until it is tasted. Just so it is with a stock of goods. A purchaser can never judge of its superior wearing qualities until a careful inspection has been made. Merchants may boast of what they display, but cold facts are stubborn things, and to be convinced one must inspect.

We do not claim to show better goods than any one else, but for our stock of Boots and Shoes we do claim that it is the largest in Pottawattamie county, the most complete in every department, and of as high a grade as any in this vicinity.
