

CARNIVAL BARGAINS WEEK AT HELLMAN'S.

Do you know what a carnival is? If you don't, you will find out by simply calling at our store this week, and feasting your eyes on one of the loveliest and finest assorted stocks of fall goods ever brought to this market. This stock is completely beyond compare; the largest variety, the finest quality at the lowest prices, has been our aim from beginning to end, in gathering and presenting this unparalleled assortment of latest and most fashionable styles, commensurate with durable material honestly made.

FALL OVERCOATS

in such beautiful designs and shades as to make your mouth water, from $5.50 and upwards.

PRIZE FIGHT IN CLOTHES.

Our summer suits have knocked out all competitors, and are now the acknowledged champions. The contest was brief, and the suits from Hellman's were the winners from the start. First Round—Our suit got in a sweeping right-hander on the neck, which sent all the coats in town staggering to the opposite corner. Second Round—Our opponents made a feeble attempt to come to the scratch again, but the big blow with the low price met them with a thump on the breast like a blow from John L. 's fist, and the whole lot of them, coats and overcoats went down in a heap and their backers threw up the sponge.

CHILDREN'S SUITS

that were made especially for school wear, of strong, durable goods, in an endless variety of the very latest patterns, at from $2 per suit upwards.

Summer Goods Knocked Out This Week.

In order to clear out summer goods as nearly as possible, we had them marked down below actual cost; yet before packing them away till next season, we will allow each and every customer, for THIS WEEK ONLY, a rebate of 10 per cent from plainly marked prices. Remember this means 10 per cent lower than the lowest price we ever quoted. Further comment is certainly unnecessary.

A DISTINGUISHED OFFICER.

The Army and Civil Record of Colonel Guy V. Henry.

CAN POINT TO IT WITH PRIDE.

Sketch of a Career More Varied and Exciting Than Usually Falls to the Lot of a Soldier.

Colonel Guy V. Henry.

Among the most popular officers at army headquarters during the past four years has been Colonel Guy Henry, inspector of small arms practice for the Department of the Platte. Colonel Henry has been an active officer ever since his entrance into the army. He served through the war of the rebellion with distinction, and has been engaged in a number of expeditions against the Indians. He has never been a "carpet knight," but has always preferred active service to repose in the garrison.

Colonel Henry has been very active in improving the marksmanship of the army. He has also written a number of books of interest to the army, notably the "Military Record of Civilian Appointments to the Army," two volumes; the "Army Catechism for Non-Commissioned Officers and Soldiers" and a manual on target practice.

In civil life as well as in the army Colonel Henry has many warm friends, and especially in this part of Omaha, where the colonel is universally liked, and when the announcement that he will leave this city and return to his command at Fort McKeaney, at his own request, after this commission, will be received with general regret.

Bellevue and Omaha are the scene, and the rifle range at Bellevue established by Colonel Henry, and at which, owing to his high standing as an officer, there have been so many different competitions, has resulted in Omaha having been advertised in every part of the United States.

Colonel Henry was born at Fort Smith, Indian Territory, where his father, an army officer, was on duty. As a boy, following his father, he travelled all over Texas and Mexico, which, in those days, took months instead of days. He was in camp at the time the Third Infantry was flooded out near San Antonio, Tex., in 1849. He entered the West Point military academy in 1850, graduated in 1851, and became a second lieutenant in the First United States artillery. He served during the war of the rebellion as follows: As aide-de-camp to General McDowell at the battle of First Bull Run; ordered to Key West, Fla., at the anticipated trouble with England over the Mason and Sillidell capture; commanded a battery at the battle of Pocotaligo, S. C., and was mentioned in orders for gallant and distinguished conduct. He was chief of artillery for the Department of the South, and commanded a battery at the captures of Morris and Polly islands. He was at the siege of Fort Wagner, Sumter and Gregg, and under Fire on Morris Island some two months. He was made colonel of the "Fourth Massachusetts" volunteers, and commanded a brigade of cavalry in operations in Florida, made a raid through that state, capturing artillery and supplies, and destroying a large quantity of cotton and other property. He was in the actions of Okefenokee, Baldwin, Lake City, Camp Finnegan, Cedar Creek and numerous other skirmishes, and in the battle of Olustee, Fla. He was transferred to the army of the James, and commanded a brigade during the expedition up the Pamunkey river and the advance on Bermuda Hundred, in the advance on Petersburg and battle of Henry's Bluff.

He was again transferred, this time to the Army of the Potomac, and was engaged in the two battles of Cold Harbor, Va., and in the retreat from the same. He was at the assault and siege of Petersburg, at the battle of the Crater and the explosion of the mine, served in the actions in front of Dutch Gap and Fort Darling. He was made brevet brigadier general of United States volunteers for gallant and distinguished conduct in front of Petersburg, Va., and was assigned to duty by President Lincoln as a general officer. Owing to illness and the Indian troubles, he was ordered on duty in command of the subdivision of Lincoln in a general officer at Denver and Fort Laramie. He was mustered out of volunteer service and in June, 1885, was made brevet captain in the United States army for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Pocotaligo, S. C. He was promoted to brevet major for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Olustee, Fla., and was again promoted to brevet lieutenant colonel for gallant and meritorious services during the war of the rebellion. He was finally made brevet colonel United States army for gallant and meritorious services in front of Petersburg, Va. He was promoted in turn to first lieutenant and captain of the First artillery and assumed active service as a colonel for gallant and meritorious services during the war of the rebellion. Visitors of The Bee.

A bevy of schoolma'ams, pretty, bright, smiling and vivacious, visited The Bee building yesterday afternoon and were shown the mysteries of printing a paper. The wild-eyed reporter and sedate editor were exhibited, the intelligent compositor held up to view and the merry pressman shown in his glass cage. The chorus of "Oh, my's!" and "Ah, me's!" that greeted each new wonder was terrific. In every department something new was found. The stereotyping room and the electric plants were the chief points of interest. The names of these handsome young trainers of youthful ideas are Misses Marston, Sieverly, Myer, Mack, McDonald and Gannon, of Omaha; Miss Fogelstrom, of Fremont; Miss Jones, of Fairfield, Ia., and Miss Rogers, of Lansing, Mich.

Each Makes a Bid For the Millard Vote.

DRUGGISTS MUST BID AGAIN.

Owing to a Blunder in Making the Lists, Another Week's Delay Entails—A Slight Reduction in Tax Levy—The Hospital.

The County Commissioners.

Someone has blundered; and "someone" seems to be able to do nothing but blunder, in the repeated efforts to get the Douglas county's drugs. When the commissioners met yesterday all the bids last invited were in the hands of the clerk. Three of them were accompanied by emphatic protests against the style of the list on which bids were asked. Leslie & Co., Blake, Bruce & Co., and W. J. Hughes declared they were bidding in the dark, on account of numerous interlinations, erasures, etc. in the lists offered them, and they thought they were not getting a fair show. Further, they said that the lists furnished them were not alike in all particulars.

Mr. O'Keefe declared that it was a scheme, but declined to say what it was. However, he demanded that the county drug list furnish the county clerk with a correct list, identical copies of which should be sent to each of the bidders.

After Clerk Roche explained that the county drug list was responsible for the irregularities—the list having been referred to him for correction—the board ordered that the bids should be returned unopened, and that others should be ready next Saturday.

A SENSATIONAL FAILURE.

Sudden Collapse of the Western Casket Company. In June, 1888, three young men came to Omaha from Akron, Mich. To Jackson they came from Akron, O., and were vouched for at this latter place as respectable young men of good habits, but without capital. They were Louis A. Bryan, J. M. Conroy and J. T. Clapp. Here they proposed to go into business and went to the board of trade with a clever story of their intentions. They had experience, business ability, and only needed financial assistance to put an important manufacturing institution in operation. They later visited Louis Reed, of the Nebraska National bank, in their project, and he helped them to raise, in subscriptions from business men in sums ranging from $5 to as many hundreds, a bonus of $5,000. With this amount in hand, these young men incorporated the Western Casket company late in June, 1888. Bryan was elected president, Conroy secretary, and J. T. Clapp vice-president. They approached the lumbermen and brick and machinery dealers, and secured on time the materials to build with and the necessary machinery. Lots at twenty-sixth street and the Belt line were purchased from Heattie, with S. A. Orchard & Co., for $2,100, $600 being paid down. The next deal made by these enterprising young men was with Mr. Martin, of the Guarantee Investment company, an institution connected with the Douglas Casket bank. Mr. Parrotte was also prominent in the investment company, but as he was out of the city at that time, the Western Casket company succeeded in getting a loan of $6,500 from Mr. Martin. When Mr. Parrotte returned he raised a storm about it and the investment company was dissolved. This money was used to pay for the lumber, brick and machinery. But the quietness of the loan was exhibited in January, this year. On the ninth day of that month, a 6 per cent dividend was declared out of Mr. Martin's ill-fated $6,500, and on the strength of the dividend $4,000 was bought and paid for $3,000, E. W. Dixon for $4,000 and Mr. Pettis for $4,000 worth of stock. Mr. Pettis is a brother-in-material and labor used at the County Hospital was allowed. The amount was $3,461.58. The chief item was $3,200 on change in floors.

By resolution it was decided that the county should pay $3,000 for the interpositions in paying district No. 219, this amount being a part of the $5,000 originally proposed for Thirtieth street.

Corrigan reported upon the condition of the road fund, stating that the whole amount available for use at the opening of the season was $76,500, and that the amounts already expended and contracted for were enough to make an overlap of $14,350. In the face of this report the road fund was immediately increased by a supplemental appropriation bill from the general fund which was allowed.

In order to make the total state and county levy 20-4-5 mills, the levy of 4-5 mills on account of the insane fund was reduced to 3-7-0.

O'Keefe wasn't satisfied to let the Millard matter drop yet. In the first set to Anderson he had, by a trick, taken the wind out of O'Keefe's sails. But there was one point on which O'Keefe could stickle for further contention, and he grasped at it with the same avidity that Sullivan displayed in arranging his recent discussion with Kilrain. There was a doctor in the lobby, an old man from Millard. He had attended the number and, he said, sent in a bill to the county for his services. The clerk denied ever having seen the bill. O'Keefe angrily declared it must have been brought in and filed as the Millard physician alleged. Anderson, whose committee (financed the whole Millard account) was referred, defended the clerk by saying that no such bill came before his committee, and he didn't believe it ever had existed. Then O'Keefe said that the record, which failed to show that the bill had been received, was doctored. He sat down declaring that the matter wasn't his to trouble. Anderson laughed quietly, but from appearances O'Keefe had the favor of the Millard delegation at the close of the fight.

The Other Side.

Mr. Taylor, of the Bradstreet company, and Mr. James A. McConary, secretary of the Western Casket company, called at The Bee office last evening and took exception to the above statements made by R. G. Dun & Co. Mr. Conroy stated that the entire article was a tissue of falsehoods and would do their company incalculable injury.

Mr. Taylor says that the statements above as given by the R. G. Dun company were executed for a purpose, and the article is one that no business man would concoct. He also says that if he were writing a card for public print he would hold a little closer to the truth than the R. G. Dun company has done. The trouble among the members of the carpet company was purely a private, personal matter. Messrs. Ross and Dixon, not having any faith in the business ability of Bryan, McConary and Clapp, wished to freeze them out. As stockholders, Ross and Dixon could not do this, but they could do so indirectly, as for this and a mortgage was given the Omaha National bank and was recalled only yesterday morning. Mr. McConary says further that the lots on which they built their factory cost $3,200, whereas the Omaha National bank was repaid for $5,500, but for only $1,500, and only $1,100 of this was paid at the time the mortgage was given.

The loan of $6,500 from the Guarantee Loan and Trust company was made by David Dennison, president of the company. Mr. Parrotte was in the city at the time, and with the other officers of the company examined the property at the time and was anxious to make the loan. The papers were bought by Mrs. Zenger as an investment and although the company has offered her the money she has refused it. The company originally owed the Omaha National bank $3,000, and about the middle of last month the account reached $5,500, being the amount the bank was carrying against the company for. The members of the company intended to defraud no one, each member wishing to push the business legitimately. The liability of the assets, however, did not exceed $17,000, and there at $4,000 short to meet all obligations if the plant can law of Mr. Woodrow, local manager of Bradstreet.

Mr. Bryan shrewdly gave Mr. Pettis a lucrative position with the company—one that would get him to buy stock, Mr. Pettis thought; but that wasn't all. They succeeded in floating enough additional stock to get the company to $100,000, which they pocketed, and subsequently fired Mr. Pettis. But the enterprise of this trio did not exhaust itself thus soon. Next they borrowed $5,500 from the Omaha National bank giving a chattel mortgage on their whole plant and stock. Then they bought a fine large stock of goods in the western markets, paying, of course, with promises only. And they billed the local merchants, everyone, who would be bent on, in sums from 10 cents up. The aggregate of these small claims is estimated at Dun's to be about $1,000.

But they flew too high, and yesterday started downward by giving to the Omaha National the chattel mortgage alluded to above. This morning Ross and Dixon, in the order named, sued out attachments against the casket company. Others will probably follow. R. G. Dun & Co. characterized the affair as simply a confidence game, and their stock when it will be found alive to their interests Bryan et al would be arrested before night.

The light in which trade agencies have regarded the stock out attachments following statement by R. G. Dun: According to a report made by the company to Dun, McConary's agency on March 5 last, its liabilities were $18,944.56 and its assets $32,610.56, leaving its assets over liabilities $13,666.00. To this statement the merchant agency at that time added the following comment: So far as we can ascertain this statement is on its face correct, though the value of the "houses and lands" is thought to be excessive. The trade here seems to distrust the management and think that their intention is to unload their stock when it will be found that the assets are not available for the figures at which they are placed, and caution is thought necessary in dealing with them, till they become better established at least.

REBUTES.

Mary McBride reported to the police yesterday that Jennie Pullias had purloined 25 yards of money and about $10 worth of wearing apparel, belonging to Mary. The police are looking for the festive Jennie.

Dufeno Rogers was arrested on a warrant yesterday, sworn out by Josephine Buloperated for the benefit of the directors.

It is proposed to open on Monday morning and an attempt will be made to make the plant bring as large and legitimate profits as is possible. The assertion that the members of the company had floated sufficient stock to bring the total up to $100,000 and then pocketed the proceeds, Mr. McConary most emphatically denies.

Mr. Woodrow's Statement.

To the Editor of The Bee: Mr. Bryan and Mr. McConary, officers of the concern, referred parties to me that were seeking investment. The parties were informed by me as to the need of additional funds for the concern and also the condition of the business. My statements were that if the concern had the proper management and they required additional funds it would be a good investment, as the line of trade was regulated by a combination. So far as my entering into any scheme to mislead anyone, it is so absurd that I do not deem it worthy of notice. F. B. Woodrow.

One of the Victims.

OMAHA, August 24.—To the Editor of The Bee: In your issue of August 24 I notice that you give my name undue prominence in connection with the Western Casket company. In order to correct the errors into which you have fallen, and to protect my good name, I ask that you will please publish this which will partially relieve me from the opprobrium which your article casts upon me. I did not come to Omaha in 1888 with the two young men, as mentioned, neither did I know them until late in March this year. I purchased stock some after coming here late in March, but was induced to purchase it on the strength of the January dividend mentioned in your article and also by a statement made to me by the management on March 23, 1888.

I was not elected vice president until the last of May, 1889. I, with others, resigned my office to make room for the new stockholders, Messrs. Ross and Dixon, whom we desired to take leading positions in the management. I am as much surprised at the failure as any one, and I state emphatically that not one stockholder can be found that will say that an in any way concerned in misrepresenting in the slightest degree to them. I have never attempted the sale of the company's stock, and have never known of any individual being concerned as mentioned in your article. I am one of the many that has been duped into buying stock of this concern. JOHN T. CLAPP.
