The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage called at THE Bre building yesterday, mainly for the purpose, as he said, of seeing what is reported to be the finest newspaper building in America. After passing through the editorial rooms, the composing and stereotyping departments, he ascended to the roof and departments, he ascended to the roof and the see material in his appressions of admirawas profuse in his expressions of admira-tion. He stated that the building far exceeded his expectations.

Harry Gallagher's Adventure. Harry, the sixteen-year-old son of Postmaster Gallagher, had an exciting adventure Sunday. He had recently come into possession of a broncho and a road cart, and drove out to the fair grounds to see the sights. The steed became frightened and made a bee line for the fence, tipping the boy out backwards. The horse and cart went through the fence three or four times, until the cart was left behind, and the pony left for parts unknown. It was recovered yesterday morning.

Mr. C. P. R. Williams, of Grand Island, visited The Ben building with more than ordinary interest, because many years ago, when this paper was in its infancy, he acted as foreman of the news-room, having been the second to fill the position. Since then Mr. Williams published the Grand Island Times for nine years and has officiated as postmaster of that thriving city.

HAVE NOT BEEN MOLESTED.

Has Immunity Been Afforded Gamblers By the Polica?

BIG GAMES RUNNING WIDE OPEN

The Bee's Informant Sees Some Very Queer Things-He Bucked the Tiger and Came Out a Winner.

Do They Stand in With the Polic ? While the recent investigation of irregularities on the part of policemen was in progress, a great many matters were brought to the attention of THE BEE which, up to this time, have not been alluded to. The abuses which first attracted public attention were the repeated arrests of lawabiding citizens, and the utter lack of judgment displayed by a number of members of the metropolitan police. Matters were brought out that placed the chief of police in a most unenviable light. In the first place

THE FACT LEAKED OUT, incidentally, that the chief, although he gets a salary of $2,000 per year, and his wife receives $600 more, is a very heavy borrower from all sorts of people, and consequently is beholden to men who have exerted an influence over him that cannot fail to be perni-

For instance, he has borrowed $300 from Garbagemaster Goldsmith, and the latter has boasted openly that he could get ANYTHING HE WANTED out of the chief to further his own interests. In this connection some very singular reports have reached this office with regard to the garbage master's way of conducting business and the peculiar way in which notices from the police office have been issued bearing a stamp with an advertisement for Goldsmith. These notices are issued to residents requiring the removal of garbage, and the advertisement impresses itself upon the recipients of the notice as a direction to them to employ Goldsmith and nobody else.

A HEAVY CREDITOR Ex-Captain Duff Green is said to have been a heavy creditor of the chief of police, which might account for certain matters not otherwise explainable. These, of course, are com-paratively trifling matters except in so far as they show that Chief Seavey had surrendered his own freedom of action to certain parties who were willing to accommodate him with A PARO BANK.

Rumors had reached THE BEE from various sources to the effect that an extensive gambling establishment was running wide open in this city by the connivance of the police. The report had it that one Demosey, whose son is a member of the police force, had been given a large interest in this gambling establishment by first threatening it with the vengeance of the chief and then claiming to have it within his power to afford the place immunity from police interference. Whether this report be true or not the fact is that the concern has been LEFT UNMOLESTED by the police as the sequel will show.

Since this information reached THE BEE certain parties, whose names we deem best to suppress, were asked to investigate for us, and learn whether or not gambling was carried on in Omaha, as represented, and to what extent the professionals were operat-ing. The following reports, each from different persons, speak for themselves: HE BUCKED THE TIGER.

"On or about the 15th day of August I was told that gambling was going on openly in a room over the Diamond saloon. About 8 o'clock in the evening I went in there alone and walked back to the pool room. I desired to see if it was a fact that gambling was going on, but not being an habitue of the house, I knew I could not get in alone. I watched my chance, and a party of young men coming in, I followed them upstairs and passed in as though I were one of the party. A faro table on one side of the room was surrounded by players, and a roulette table "On or about the 15th day of August I was surrounded by players, and a roulette table on the other side was crowded. I staid there about half an hour watching the players. I understand that the place is running every night, and it is no secret to men

HE CAME OUT WINNER. "Thursday, August 23, I happened into the Diamond saloon pool room, and, while standing idly looking at the blackboards containing the base ball and norse race combinations, noticed three or four persons ascend three or four steps on the west side of the room, go through a door and be lost to sight. Being very curious to ascertain where they went, and for what business, I asked one of the loungers in the pool room what was going on beyond the mysterious door, and received the answer; "Why, that door leads to the on beyond the mysterious door, and received the answer; "Why, that door leads to the fare bank; you must be a stranger; if you want to play, there is no difficulty in doing so. All you will have to do is to walk up those steps, go through that door, keep right on till you arrive at another, behind which you will find a colored gentieman who will admit you." I replied that I was no stranger, but had been under the impression that fare banks had been entirely wiped out of Omaha. Having toyed a little with the tiger myself when a young man, I thought I would go up and play awhile. Following the instructions given me, although I was a stranger to the sable gentleman on guard, I had no trouble whatever in getting in. Fare and rouletto were running in full blast, although the most play was centered about the fare layout, where about twelve players were engaged in an endeavor to win the bank roll, although at the rate they were betting their money it would take some time to do it, as I understand the house has a pretty good sum bestand the house has a pretty good sum behind it. As I walked up to the layout the dealer cast an inquiring look at me as if to say, 'Weil, I would like to see the color of your money, as we do not admit lookers-on your money, as we do not admit lookers-on. I therefore threw down three dollars and received six white checks, fifty-cent checks being the lowest in the house except roulette. I played with varying success for a little over an hour, and when I got up from the game I was $5.50 ahead. Meanwhile the door continued to open and close, and there was a continual coming and going. Men whom I never seen before and men whom I was well acquainted with were there."

HE SAW SOME QUEER THINGS.

HE SAW SOME QUEER THINGS. "The other evening I dropped in at the Diamond, a place on Douglas street where there is a great display of glass-covered walls and ceiling, and in which was mirrored a crowd of men ranged along a counter talking, drinking and sucking through straws, the contents of glasses. Others were looking at a blackboard with a lot of figures on the After refreshing, ourselves we followed it. After refreshing ourselves we followed a squad of men up stairs.

There were several tables, at each of which sat There were several tables, at each of which sat a dozen or more men jingling money which they would now and again trade to a fellow (who sat at the tables) for a lot of chips. The man who took the cash seemed to have another duty—on the table. In front of him was a metal box which I should say was the size of a playing card, as several of the cards of that description were neatly litted into it. At the top of the box was an aperature large enough to show all the spots on the top card—the cards being held up against the top by a spring in "The fellow, besides pulling the money drawer, would take a pull at the cards in this box, drawing them out at the side. He would draw one card and then another, whe would draw one card and then another, when there would be a jingling and a changing of the checks and money, which was piled up on certain cards, arranged face up on the table. After the changes had been made the money man would pull out two more cards, and then open and shut the drawer unde

"At another table a man was spinning some sort of a wheel with a marble in it. On a table were a lot of numbers printed in black and red; there, too, were "checks."

At this table also a lot of men were crowded around piling checks on the numbers. The money man was here also only instead of pulling cards he gave the wheel a jerk which after a moment or two would slow up and the marble would roll down into certain kind of a groove would cause the man to say something that sounded like "red on thirty." Then the money man would take up the check and distribute a few and take in more cash.

"While I was wondering how the thing was done a young man approached and offered to handle my money if I did not know how. I watched the different games a while and then left the place."

BUSINESS WAS BOOMING. Saturday night, August 31, was a busy one at the Diamond, both in the pool and gam-bling rooms. Through the week only one bling rooms. Through the week only one fare table layou, was used, but on Saturday another one is brought into requisition, as many of the patrons of the week draw their weekly salary on that day. Things had rather the appearance of old times on the night in question. Roulette and stud poker were also in full blast, and the tables were surrounded by a motiey group, all bent on winning a few dellars, the clink of which could be heard as they went into the money drawer—for that was where most of it went—and but a little of it was drawn out. The colored senticel on guard at the en-

The biggest game in the city is conducted by one George Carpenter, in room No. — Globe hotel. It is a poker game, and is carried on in open defiance of the law, inasmuch as everybody seems to know that it is running. It is principally patronized by men of wealth, ex city officials, politicians, merchants and professional men, with a penchant for the pasteboards. It is also one of the heaviest games that has been carried on in this city since the haloyon days of '82, '83 and '84, when political interference was a thing unfeared and unheard of. The ante at this game is generally $2 call $5, with the ceiling for a limit, and Carpenter is capping out a very hand-some revenue from the "rake off," which frequently amounts to a couple of hundred

'cases" a night.

"cases" a night.

A notably big "sitting" was that which took place in Carpenter's fooms on the night of August 20, when a Hastings dry goods merchant dropped something like $4,500.

Among those who "sat in" at the play were several prominent gentlemen of this city.

The story of the game is about as follows: The Hastings man, who is a brother of a banker of some small town west of here, was invited into Carpenter's saloon for a quiet little set-to at draw. This was about 4 in the afternoon, and the game ran along until dinner time with varying success. When all participating were more or less exhilerated with the wine that had been served, and after indulging in a sumptuous meal brought up to the room, they resumed play, raising the ante from "2 call 5" to "10 call 25." By midnight the Hastings merchant had dropped $5,000 in cash, but he played on, the accommodating proprietor putting up a "marker" for him to the extent of $1,500 more, which he dumped by morning. He gave his check for the balance due the house, who of course cashed the chips on the table, but requested that it be held until Thursday morning, when he would return from Hast-ings with the cash. This was done, and on Thursday the victim returned and settled the account. This instance is only cited as an evidence of the magnitude of the game that is prosecuted here.

The Bre has information of heavy losses at the Diamond during the past month, but it is not considered necessary to give particulars and names of losers.
