Jennie Wright, of Red Oak, Visits Omaha to Suicide. DIED FOR HANK ALLEN.

Spending the Night in a After Drunken Orgie She Winds Up an HI-Starred Career By Drowning.

A SOMERSAULT TO DEATH.

End of a Carnival of Shame. "Tell Hank I died for him."

Then there was a plunge, a low, gurgling cry, a feeble struggle with the merciless waves, one glimpse of a white face, and one more unfortunate weary of breath had left behind the memory of a short, ill-spent life to brave the uncertainties of the great unknown.

Jennie Wright was her name, and she came to Omaha from Red Oak, Ia. She was about seventeen years of age, of medium height, and was really quite pretty. She made her home while here with a family named Culbertson, who live amid the squalor of the river bottoms in the lowest part of town, near Third and Vine streets. The Culbertsons knew her in Red Oak, and to them she went when she came here at the period indicated to begin a week's caraival of shame. Since her arrival here Jennie, or "Chink," as she was called, has lavished her favors upon several young men and boys in the neighborhood, and her conduct Saturday night was only on a par with her actions for the five or six days preceding.

About a week ago she became acquainted with Hank Allen, a bartender in John Clair's "B. & M." saloon, which stands on the corner of Vine street and the B. & M. railroad tracks. Hank says he did not care for her at all, and didn't suppose she cared for him, but the neighbors assert that Jennie conceived a violent passion for the mixologist, who is a tall, straight and by no means ill favored young man; in fact, decidedly hand-

On Saturday night there was a dance at the "B & M." The party was not exactly up to the standard of the select 400; in fact, if was a pretty tough crowd. Jennie was there, and set about making herself the belle of the occasion. She succeeded to such an extent that a half dozen or so of young fellows bought her beer enough to get her beastly intoxicated. From that time she was not a woman, but a brute, and from what can be learned disgraced herself beyond description. But when the orgie was nearly over her demeanor changed, and she wanted to go bome and would not be satisfied unless Allen went with her. He declined the honor, and a young fellow named Benkke accepted the responsibility of escorting her to the Culthe responsibility of escoraig har to the chi-bertson mansion. During the walk home she raved constantly about Allen, and declared that she would kill herself and give him something to think of. Benkke tired of her babbling, and when he got her home left her to the tender mercies of Culbertson, who, with one Davis and a couple of boys, were standing near the house on the river bank.

Culbertson noticed that she was drunk and endeavored to induce her to go mside, but she refused, and, breaking away from him, jumped into the skiff, sat down on the rear seat and deliberately vaulted over back-ward into the water. As she stepped into the boat she shouted, "Tell Hank I died for him," Culbertson and Davis made an effort to save her, but it was an abortive one, as she came to the surface but once, and then only for a moment.

The girl's parents are laboring people and live in Red Oak. Their names are not known by the Culbertsons, except that they are Mr. and Mrs. Wright. The girl has a cousin in Omaha, but who he is the family in the bottoms do not know.

It was assorted yesterday morning that Allen knew about the girl's death and that he was in the boat with her when she jumped out. He denies this story emphatically, and was corroborated by the eye witnesses to the suicide. Allen says he met her about a to ameliorate and improve the condition of the colored race. The few exceptions to the week ago, and that since that time he has not spoken to her over a half dozen times, and that as far as he knows she had no eason on earth to get "stuck" on hun. On aturday night she was awfully drunk, and he supposes she was angry because he wouldn't go home with her. He knew noth-ing of her suicide until some boys came and woke nim up and sud that Jennie Wright had drowned herself between 4 and 5 o'ciock. o'clock. An effort was made yesterday morning to recover the body, but it was a fruitless one. Coroner Drexel visited the spot about 7 o'clock, but could do nothing in the matter. The spot chosen by Jepnie as a place to shuffle off this mortal coil is anything but a pleasant one. It is about four blocks below the bridge and is in the midst of such impurity and fith that only the trained noses of the inhabitants can brook the effluvia arising from the numerous rivulets of putridity that from a dozen sewers pour down the gut-ters. The river at that point is very low, and as the bottom is filled with snags, etc., and there being but little current, it is quite likely that the body will come to the surface

They do not wish their names mentioned at present, but it is known that the proposed purchasers have ample capital, and, should they affect their purpose, will give Omaha the strongest house, financially, in their line in the west and make three strong jobbing houses in this line hore. Rev. Mr. Vandewater, with Elders J. D. Bogart and I. Z. Bogart, appointed by the classis, investigated the charges of drunkenness and reported that they houses in this line here.

A Big Hat Concern.

It is rumored in commercial circles that important changes are about to be consumated in the jobbing hat trade in Omsha. The members of a firm now in that line in general harmony are largely the result of the influence of bad advisers. The south is a land filled with school houses, for white and colored children alike churches and various societies and other organizations for the mental and moral advancement of its youth and the fostering and perpetuation of all the refining influences and principles which form the elements of character essential to the prosperity and grandeur of a noble people. To this country the people of the south invite their brothers of the northwest. Land is plentiful and houses for the immigrant can be had at modtions throughout the south have been in operation whose chief object is to encourage and invite immigration. This is conspicu-ously the case in my own state-Louisiana. The immigrant is received with much satis-faction and every facility and courtesy ex-tended him, whether he be capitalist, merchant, artisan, farmer or what not. If he comes an industrious, honest, clean and law - abiding man, he is extend-ed the right hand of fellowship, and is counted as one of us, without reference or any regard whatever either to what may be his politics or religion. A man is gauged by the standard of his own merit and his usefulness and intrinsic value as an individual or a public officer. I have given you but a few of the thoughts which involutarily rushed to my mind upon reading the special from New Orleans, and it seems to me unfortunate that your correspondent felt justified in quoting his authority. I am not in any way accredited to speak on the subject, except in the inalien-able right of every citizen to protect his home. I am impelled by what seems to me a sense of duty to say what I can in the brief time of my stay in your beautiful and phetime of my stay in your beautiful and phe-nomenal city, in correction of the very false impressions the publication referred to may make among the good people of Neoraska and the great and powerful northwest. The people of this glorious union from no point of the compass can afford to go backward. The word is forward all along the line, and the time for mischief making by such men as your correspondent's informant should have now passed forever. The war is over, and while passed forever. The war is over, and while the blessing was very deeply disguised, the blessing was there nevertheless, and its pro-visions have extended over the entire country against which, in its reunited strength, no nation of the earth can prevail. The peo-ple of the northwest are cordially invited to come to see us, and to realize the good feel-ing that lies under the hearty grip of our right hand, to enjoy the hospitalities of our people and to live among us to see for them-selves the falsity of the statements made in this morning's BEE. Then will be realized, in part, the objects sought to be achieved by the great world's exposition held in New the great world's exposition held in New Orleans a few years ago, that the spirit of brotherly love and mutual forbearance should pervade the people in every corner of the United States, for the promotion of the common weal under a lasting and growing community of interests. Respectfully, T. M. PHELAN. 134 Gravier Street, New Orleans.
