HYPNOTIZED LOBSTERS.

The other day I read in some paper a curious story of the hypnotizing of a bevy of lobsters, says the London Truth. The gifted operator caused them to stand on their hind legs and pose in this and other ridiculous attitudes for long periods in the style customary at mesmeristic seances. The result was obtained by tickling the backs of the crustaceans. Speaking from memory, I believe that one particularly old and hardened lobster of demagogical ferocity was rendered so tame that he distinctly smiled on the company, at the same time paring audibly. This clearly shows the "unsubstantiated depths of feeling" which may exist even in the constitution of a shell-fish.
