THE CAMPAIGN IN MARYLAND.

Methods of Conducting it a Repetition of Former Years.

PART TAKEN BY NEWSPAPERS.

Journals Which Rent Out Their Columns For the Sewage of Opposition—Queer Incidents of a Campaign.

Money Talks in Maryland.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—[Special to THE BEE.]—The campaign in Maryland which has just ended is in fact a repetition of every other campaign that has been held in the state for years past. But to one who has never been in the midst of a Maryland campaign it is unique and unparalleled anywhere. The Maryland campaign is unique from the first that their fight on the state ticket was practically hopeless, and indeed George Wellington, when he accepted the nomination for comptroller at West Ministers, stated that he had been chosen to lead a forlorn hope. He of course referred only to the state ticket. The record made by the republicans in the presidential election was such that there was every reason to believe the legislature could be carried, and it is of unusual importance, because the legislature elects a United States senator to succeed Senator Wilson. On the basis of a presidential election only Prince George county and Kent county needed to have been won by the republicans to make the legislature republican. It is the curse in Maryland republican politics that the republicans can always be depended upon to split into faction fights at the very time when unity would have led them on to victory, and this campaign has exemplified that, as usual, by the fact that Prince George has put two republican candidates in the field, while the legislature was to be elected, and the hope of a republican senator to succeed Mr. Wilson are very slender. So much then for state politics.

The only state paper, the republican organ, the comptroller, and the republicans never really expected to win that. Mr. Wellington will be appointed to the position of comptroller of the state, and the republicans never really expected to win that. Mr. Wellington will be appointed to the position of comptroller of the state, and the republicans never really expected to win that.

There is no city in the country where a political campaign is run as in Baltimore. Being in Washington, where the campaign has been worked out so that it is necessary to go down 800 feet to get the stones, which are buried in the mass of overhanging reef, the falling of which is of frequent occurrence. The field is now controlled by a coterie of London and Paris capitalists, and their efforts to advance prices have been promoted by the large demand for these goods occasioned by the French expedition.

Only a very few stones are now found in the river, most of them being obtained from the blue clay. As it no longer pays to work the mines of Brazil, which are now only the smaller stones are found, they are neglected, and the market is almost exclusively supplied from South Africa. It may be considered as impossible to work the Brazilian mines with success. It was quite different in 1845, when they picked up stones from the ground, but surface mining is now a thing of the past, even in South Africa, where very costly machinery is required for all mining operations.

It is impossible to buy rough stones and cut them at present prices. In Amsterdam, where several thousand persons are engaged in this business, the high price of stones from South Africa has caused a suspension of their industry. I estimate the advance in prices at 20 per cent.

Certain parties, said a large Broadway importer, who control the output of stones from South Africa, have combined to sustain an advance in prices. This they can do in the absence of any other appreciable source of supply. The heavy operators have been working for several years to obtain control of the larger mines, and, having at length done so, have not allowed their purpose to cool, but have at once begun to hold back the output of rough stones. With the increase of price the smaller mines, which are not yet controlled by the syndicate, can be worked to greater advantage. The annual product of the South African mines now amounts to about $50,000,000 in value. It is impossible to get a contract to ship stones as South Africa is the only present source of supply. In the twenty years that have elapsed since the discovery of the African mines all other sources have been exhausted, and the output of the African fields diamonds would now be so scarce as to command a fabulous price. The combination of the dozen or more larger mines is due to present advanced prices, and it is impossible to say further that the market will be steady, without jumps or violent fluctuations.

The American market is already influenced by the advance in Europe, said an old importer on John street.

The increase in price is perfectly natural and what may be expected. The African mines are being worked to greater and greater depth, and consequently at greater and greater expense. This fact will cause diamonds to grow steadily dearer until some new source of supply is opened where mines can be worked at smaller expenditure than at present.

There is nothing in the matter to occasion alarm. The rise may be estimated at about 20 per cent.

The delicious fragrance, refreshing coolness and eye beauty imparted to the skin by Puzon's Powder, commands it to all ladies.
