Frainey's Smart Talk. "Frainey, John J., lawyer, r. 127 Fairview avenue."

The history of the Frainey case has been previously published in these columns, but it is not out of place to here give a brief recapitulation of the case.

The funeral of George H. son of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. H. ...

Since his removal to the Nebraska metropolis, Frainey has been employed in an editorial capacity by W. H. Vaughn on the Omaha Enquirer.

It was reported that the Frainey case had been settled, and that the Frainey family had been satisfied with the result.

The amount now due by Frainey is a little over $2,500, and an attempt has been made to induce him to turn over his homestead property to satisfy the claim.

The court can not take possession of the property as long as the Frainey occupies it, and unless the claim is satisfied, Frainey will remain behind the bars.

Whatever move is made, it is certain that Frainey will not assume his new position at the Sidney Telegraph for some little time.

Second Cast of the Net. "Why didn't you publish the name of the winner, when giving the names of the possible candidates for the mayoralty?"

"General Sheridan pointed her out to me in Washington one day. She was a clerk in the pension office then, and Sheridan got her the position. He told me the whole story."

"What was it?" "Well, this is it, as I remember it. The general said people always talked about Sheridan's luck and said he was reckless and daring, but this woman was wiser than he. She was his wife, and that he always fought on his information. There was no luck in it, he said. When he was down in the Shenandoah valley in '61, lying before Winchester, he wanted information of what was going on in the enemy's lines, and he wanted it awful bad. Crook was pretty well acquainted in that country and the general at last asked him if he didn't know someone in Winchester upon whom they could depend. He said that there was a girl in the town whom he thought was all right, and Sheridan concluded to try her."

"There was an old lady who had a garden patch about five miles from the general's headquarters," continued the speaker. "This lady had a pass to go into Winchester three or four times a week with vegetables for the confederate officers and townpeople. Sheridan had his agents watch the quartermaster and asked him if he knew the schoolmarm. He said he did, and he agreed to get a note to her. Sheridan wrote a letter to her on a piece of paper, appealing to her sympathy and requesting her to give him some information of what was going on in the rebel camp. He wrapped the note up in tin foil in a little wad and made the old lady carry it in his mouth. Next day the quartermaster was called to the rebel camp, and he gave the note to Rebecca Wright—that was her maiden name."

"Did he get an answer?" "Yes, the lady brought back a reply in which the schoolmarm gave some very important information, and he was obliged to send some more from time to time. She and General Sheridan kept growth or development, and shrinking in their creeds all that is best in God and His attributes. The sayings of Christ lead us to look for something very different. It is impossible to read the gospel and not feel that other revelations of God might be forthcoming in the lapse of ages. Many of the sayings of Christ prove that He never intended that His mission should cease with His departure, that stagnation of intellect should be the consequence of the closing of the canon of scriptures. It is a weak position for His church to take to-day, for by such a position we deny the presence of God's holy spirit in the world, which is still as much God's world as ever.

The speaker then went on to declare the necessity of reason, as well as faith, that we know from the history of the past that man's conception of God would contain only so much positive truth as the human mind is capable of receiving, and the fact that our knowledge of God is not a complete revelation, but that we are in the process of receiving it, and that we are to be brought to the knowledge of God by reason, and that though absolute truth is unattainable, the amount of error in our views may be constantly diminished, and thus our duty is to strive to reach the truth by reason, and that though absolute truth is unattainable, the amount of error in our views may be constantly diminished, and thus our duty is to strive to reach the truth by reason.

They are all broken lights of Thee and thou, O God, art more than they. There are others, however, who are content to remain in the old shell of a never changing theology, who cling like barnacles to the old, and who are content to remain in the old shell of a never changing theology, who cling like barnacles to the old, and who are content to remain in the old shell of a never changing theology.

A LUCKY LITTLE SCHOOLMARM. She Helped Sheridan to Win His Famous Fight at Winchester. "Do you know," said an old gentleman of military manners, who spoke to Mr. Charles Frothingham in the lobby of the Twenty-third street theatre, New York, between the acts of "Shenandoah," "that I saw a lady in the row in front of you who reminds me of the little Quaker schoolmarm who helped General Sheridan to win the fight at Winchester?"

"Who is she?" "She is the wife of a man named Bonal—" "Mrs. B. Bonal, I believe, she was called," said the military man. "General Sheridan pointed her out to me in Washington one day. She was a clerk in the pension office then, and Sheridan got her the position. He told me the whole story."

"What was it?" "Well, this is it, as I remember it. The general said people always talked about Sheridan's luck and said he was reckless and daring, but this woman was wiser than he. She was his wife, and that he always fought on his information. There was no luck in it, he said. "Did he get an answer?" "Yes, the lady brought back a reply in which the schoolmarm gave some very important information, and he was obliged to send some more from time to time. She and General Sheridan kept up a correspondence after that, and he had every thing said early was doing. He had a few weeks ago sent word that Kershaw's Division of 8,000 or 10,000 men had been detached and was going to join Lee's army. As soon as Sheridan learned that Kershaw was gone and was far enough off to prevent his getting back, he made the attack and captured Winchester.

"Did he find the girl in the town?" "Indeed he did, and his report of that battle was written in her school room. Then the military man re-entered the theatre and saw Sheridan's ride enacted.

The worst feature about catarrh is its dangerous tendency to consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying the blood.

ELECTRICITY THE FATAL SPARK. Physiological Theories Unsettled by the Investigations of a Student.

"How are we made and what are we here for?" Man is an inquisitive animal, and these two questions have bothered him in every age and in every clime.

There is a man in this city who claims to have made some novel and startling discoveries in human physiology, to wit: that the human body is a self-contained system, which makes up and governs the human system.

"I have spent thirty years in the investigation of electricity as applied to the human body," said Dr. Stevens to an inquirer, who called upon him in his residence in a street in St. Louis. "The old Greek philosopher, Thales, who was one of the first discoverers of electricity, made many interesting experiments and applied the results of his investigations to the treatment of certain bodily diseases, and that the ignorant and superstitious people of his time revered him as a god, but from that time to this very little notice has been taken of electricity by writers on the human body, and the result is that their ignorance of the great principles and laws that govern electricity.

"Electricity is everywhere," continued the doctor. "Every speck, and atom in the universe is filled with electricity. The food we eat and the water we drink are charged with it. The so-called oxygen of the air is only electricity increased in tiny vesicles of water."

Of Dr. Stevens' most peculiar theories regarding the circulation of the blood, which he believes to be effected in a way undreamt of in the philosophy of the old school doctors, God has placed us in this world to bless and benefit our kind.
