A Disastrons Fire.

A Disasteous Fire.

The fire at William Lewis back, cab and bus stable at 1:80 o'clock yesterday morning, of which brief mention was made in yesterday's line, proved to be most disastrous. Itselfic destroyed three cabs, two hadis, sixteen sets of horness, a large quantity of hay and twesty-three horses perished in the flames. So quickly and the flames spread that the whole structure was a-blaze when the department arrived, but by vigorous work the fire was soon extinguished, although not until a rent smooth of damage had been done. Very little of the property in the burn or adjoining sheds was saved, and the total loss is estimated at about $4,000. The property was insured for about $4,000. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an about $4,000.

in the bare or adjoining sheds was saved, and the total loss is estimated at about $4,000. The property was insured for about $4,000. The grouperty was insured for about $4,000. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an meendary, the teroth being applied on the south side from the sales. Along this side of the bars in front of the norses several boards were knocked off, leaving in many places apertures nearly large snough for a man to craw through. The supposition is that the areon flond reached through only of the seven through the supposition is that the areon flond reached through only of oil upon the strawmal accumulated rubbish, and applied the march. The fire quiesly communicated with the hay in the lott and the litter scattered through the stalls, and almost instantly the entire interior of the structure was in a biase. An employe, William Farrell, who was sleeping in one of the bases, barrely escaped with his life.

He was awakened by the sinche, and hurriedly dismounting from his bed rushed for the door. The crackfling flames and dense smalke confused him and be attack his head against a hack, felling him almost insensible to the floor. He managed to grope his way outside, where the fresh air soon revived him.

The former was just returning from a professional call on East Pierce street, and had just reached the ordered in the control of Broadway and bereet such as the ordered of Broadway and bereet such as the other of Broadway and the control of Broadway and the control of Broadway and the control of Broadway at the time and naw a flash of light. He ran around the block to the alley, only to flid the rear portion of the barn a seething mass of flames, and as soon as the front doors were burst open the draught thus created soon insured the destruction of the entire building. With the assistance of Dick Rick etta and Assistant Fire Chief Nicholson he managed to pull out a few vehicles, but these were busly burned and charred. When the rear wall of the barn was burst once a horse rushed mady out, smoking and bistered, and his head badly burned. A few seconds inter its mate staggered into the open air in a most horrible condition. It had instinctively crounched against a pile of damp manure and thus protected one side, but the other side was fairly shiaze. The hair was all burned off, and the flish was sizzling on the ribs of the agonized bruck. The ears were burned off, the cyce gone and the insorth drawn open and distorted by the intense heat. How the poor creature managed to reach the creat of the agonized bruck. The ears were burned off, the cyce gone and the insorth drawn open and distorted by the intense heat. How the poor creature managed to reach the creat of the day officer trained as witnesses, their started and was subsequently released, but the others are now held as witnesses, their stories being regarded as of the ultimost mortanee.

In the afteracen two more of Lewis' men, known as "Lowboy Jim" and "Cooky," were acreated and will be hid to await develop— "Coowboy Jim" denied at first that be was in the bare that much, but subsequently stated that he was there, and was sleeping in the office. He was awaitened and beard "Cocky" coming down stairs. He asked the latter if he did not smell smoke, when "Cocky" coming down stairs. He asked the latter if he did not smell smoke, when "Cocky" answered "yes, the old shell is a-dire, but let the d—d thing burn. He said he lay still for some time, when the fire drove him out. His story is so incressonable, coupled with the fact that he is a half-witted character, that no credence is given to what he says, and the statement that he made later, to the effect that "Cocky" said on the night before the fire that he would fire the barn unless Lewis boad him is also given little credence. "Cocky" had been into city hat there days and it's recovered as introbable. The prevailing opicion is that the incendiaries are still at large. There is a side to the case, however, which has quite a sensational savor. It is alleged that the bare was fired for the purpose of obtaining a reward offered by one of Lewis' rivals and competitors in the back business. The grounds on which this belief is based are as follows: About two weeks ago, after the attempt was made to fire George Smith's bare on North Sixth street, young Luccock remarked that there was a barn in the city that a certain party would give $2,000 to have burned. The attempt was made to fire George Smith's barn on North Sixth street, young Luccock was alled in, however, who made give $2,000 to have a certain party would give $2,000 to have a certain party would give $2,000 to have a certain party would give $2,000 to the charge, and that all that could be done would be to place him under bonds. Luccock was achied in, however, and made affiduct to the following story.

Some time ago, while the matter of the incending fires about the city there being discussed, We asked what parts no meats in any and then offer. Welch replied "Bill Lewis," and then offered him the best pair of horses, harness and hack he owned if he would set fire to Lewis 'stable. Lincock said it would be risky business, but Welch assured him that the fire could be set and no one would suspect him. That ended the matter for the time.

the fire could be set and no one would suspect him. That ended the matter for the time.

As this affidavit was made two weeks before the fire was set, much importance is naturally attached to it. Luccock denies having set the fire or knowing anything about it, but repeats the story toid above.

Mr. Weich has lived here so long and has borne such a reoutation that Luccock's story, though made in the form of an affidavit, gains little credence. The story is very improvable, and the most charitable construction is that Luccock natural story is very improvable, and the most charitable construction is that Luccock nisunderstood some commercer of the story is very improvable, and the most charitable construction is that Luccock nisunderstood some commercer. He denies omphatically having had any conversation whatever will Luccock concerning any such matter. He decock concerning any such matter. Luccock was in his employ two months are, but after working about thirty days was discharged on account of dishonestly. Luccock has had trouble with Mrs. Weich, who was compelled to resent his abuse by freely pummering him with a bucket. Luccock left, and Mr. Weich's theory is that the affidavit was made from spite. Luccock has been in the employ of Lewis since leaving Weich.

Lewis has employed Colonel Sapp to assist the county alterney in prosecuting the case, but they are just now awaiting further developments.

Clatterbuck was in Justice Schurr's court yesterday morning demanding a warrent for the arrest of a sensol teacher named John Sylvester, who, it appears, has substituted a full grown cowbitte for the regulation birch in district No. 6, Garner township. On Tucsday attersoon Clatterbuck's fitteen year-old son neglected to comply with the teacher's rule that requires the pupils to read an essay or recite a declamation once each week. Young Clatterbuck sought to be excused on the ground of ill-health, but the excuse was not accepted, and at 4 o'clock, when school was dismissed, the teacher wave the boy a severe castigation with a rawhine. The fathor shates that the child's flesh was cut in many places, and many ugit wells and bruises were inflicted upon his body, and several serious wounds made on his face and neck. The father saxe that the teacher lost his tenuer and struck with all his might with a whig that would be crued to use upon a horse. Clatterbuck declares his determination to prescute the teacher to the full extent of the law and ascertain whether or not such untarism can be practiced in lowa with imponity.

Weighing School Coal.

To the Editor of The Birs: You state in yesterday's paper that no action was taken by the school board in regard to the weighing of coal as permitted by Director Lawson. Will you blease inform the public what the law is as to the use of the public scales! Does it require that certain kinds of produce shall be weighed on them, or is it discretionary with the buyer or selict! Further, if the contract musde by the school board requires its coal to be weighed on the public scales, why does Director Lawson violate it, and why does the school board anceton insaction.

The ordinance provides that various products, coal, wood etc., "offered for sale," shall be weighed or measured by the city weighmaster.

The coal contract with the school board provides that the coal shall be weighed on the city scales, "unless otherwise directed by the board." Mr. Lawson, the chairman of the committee, has taken it upon himself to direct otherwise. He has stated his reasons for so doing and reported his action to the board, and as the board made no protest, it tacilly endorsed this action.

This scene was witnessed by me a fortnight ago at Innshruck, while I stood at the hotel door, wondering whether I was enjoying myself. It immediately crossed my mind that the two travelers ware flying from the lady who knitted. A glance at their baggange convinced me, for the labeles said "Landeck" and she was on her way to Landeck, when I fled from her at Constance. As it turned out, my surmise was cerrect; but I do not boast of that. The fact is, that a knitting lady had been in pursuit of me for two weeks, until now I had her nealess on the brain. I do not need to describe a knitting lady. She is the prim person who knits everywhere—on railways, in restaurants, at concerts; and I wish there was a law against her. This one knitted in Cologne cathedral, and was probably a greater nuisance in Paris than the Elifet lower.

Fronting a Sheep-Dog.

was staying with a Kentucky farmer one night, says a writer in the New York Son, and soon after supper he said to his three sons:

"Well, boys it is the right sort of a night, and I reckon you'd better put the wool on and lie low."

When I asked for an explanation of his strange words he invited me to go out to the barn, where the boys had preceded us, and where I found each one covered with a disguise made of sheep-skin. Each one had a short, heavy club, with a portion of it ernamented with sharp spikes, and when ready they went over to the pasture where about 100 sheep were lying. When down on their hands and knees a little way off they closely resembled overgrown sheep. They took different stations and the farmer and I sat down in a fence corner to wait.

It was perhaps an hour before an alarm came. Then a dog stole into the field from the rear side and the sheep came running toward us. Presently there was a yelp and then all grew quiet. Then minutes later a second dog came in and he was soon followed by a third. Then, as half an hour passed without another alarm, the three boys came over to us, each dragging a dead dog by the tail.

"Git the spade and let's bury 'em," said the old man. "How many does this make this summer, Rubey!"

"Wenty-six, I reckon."

"Nicese thing in the world!" continued the father, as he rubbed his hands together. "Dog takes one of the boys for an oid wether, make a dash at him, and the next thing he knows his nead is busted. No shooting, no row to attract the neighbors, and the man who misses his dog can have no hard feetings. Tumble 'em in, boys, and then we'll tap that barrel of new ider."

An Adventure With a "Wood Cat."

Jim Madrah of Winsted, Conn., and two other sportsmen decided to go cooning. They took along Madrah's bull-fog, Blanche. A coon was shortly treed, and two of the hunters ascended to dislodge it, while Madrah and his dog remained below. The con finally jumped and the buildog strangled it. It was found to be what is known in Connecticut as a "wood cat." It is a hybrid, being a cross between a domestic cat and a wildent. It weighed sixteen pounds. Its body was longer than that of a wildcat but it had the wildcat's head and tiger stripes. Its legs were thick and short. The dog's face was budly bitten and sorutched. Mr. William E. Garrison of Danbury, was less fortunste than Madrah. He went out the carly part of the wook on Boar mountain, His cog drove a coon into a hollow log. The tail of the coon was visible, and Garrison took hold and heaved. The coon came out and caught the hunter by the hand, and severed the index finger at the second joint.

Jonquin Miller's statement that the name Habo should be spelled Idanho, and that it means "light on the mountains," is disputed by an old settler, who says: "The word Idaho was perfectly Iamitiar to thousands of white miners, traders and travelers of every class before Miller ever saw the country. Even in 1860, a steamer on the Columbia river, at a point above the Cascades, was christened Idaho. "Gem of the mountains is the correct translation of the Indian phrase which has become the territory's name.
