Exponitions were heaped upon Mr. Chase for dorising and carrying out this novel idea. Expressions of surprise and approval were heard on every side and the new idea seemed to take hold of the popular fancy and predictions were numerous that another year would see a number of these receptions. An Insurance Bond.

An Insurance Bond. The Equitable Life Assurance Society for a number of years has written more assurance annually, and has held a larger surplus than any other company, and the figures published in another column show a handsome advance over those of the preceding year. The society now offers a bend which under one contract combines an invest-ment with life assurance. It is stated that by this combination, a variety of benefits are secured which will un-doubledly render the bond attractive, but to young men who are able to lay up small sums from year to year, and to men of wealth who have surplus in-comes to invest.
