SOME NOTED HOUSE LEADERS

Ex-Speaker Carlisle and His Very Unassuming Manners. HIS COURTESY TO A NEGRO GIRL.

How the Silver-Tongued Breckenridge Talks His Speeches into a Graphophone—Bold Ben Butterworth.

The Opposing Warriors. [Copyright 1890, by Frank G. Carpenter.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—[Special to THE BEE.]—The present congressional session is going to be one of fighting from the word go.

Both democrats and republicans have dipped their tongues in oil of strol and the venomous remarks of the past week are but the beginning of a poisonous stream of eloquence which will burn, not only the hearts of their opponents, but which will stir the souls of both parties throughout the country.

The men are ripe for the occasion. There have never been more noted leaders in both houses of congress than there are now, and the house has a dozen bright statesmen who are ready for the fray and are glad that it is on.

I took a look at John G. Carlisle today. He looks almost as young as he did when he was elected speaker six years ago. His shoulders have become slightly stooped, it is true, and the bald spot on his crown has widened, but his blue eyes are full of fire and the iron of his blood has not weakened by his unremitting industry.

Carlisle is one of the hardest workers in public life. He leaves his accomplished, Juno-like wife to keep up the society end of his Washington life, and he delves in figures and facts as though he were a young lawyer of twenty-five with his reputation to make. John G. Carlisle is six feet tall. Of slender form, he has a strong, rough, honest face.

His forehead is high and broad, his complexion is sallow, his eyes light gray and his cheeks are thin. He dresses in staid, black, wears a double-breasted frock and ties with his own hands the black string necktie around his staid collar. I would not call him a handsome man, but he would be a striking one anywhere.

On the floor he speaks with few gestures and his voice is a hard metallic one, becoming at times almost nasal. His style is in his way of speaking, and he remembers everything that he has ever read and he seems to have read everything. He makes no fuss in his speaking, does not talk loudly, and he carries the most unassuming man in Washington.

I rode down with him from the capitol one day in a street car and when we reached the avenue a young negro girl came running. There was no seat for her and she grasped the strap as she looked up and down the benches on both sides and surprised to see Speaker Carlisle, for he was then speaker of the house, half rise to give her his place. A moment later he saw that he could make room for her and he stepped aside and crowded the rest of us up against the end and MOVED HER TO SIT DOWN. His treatment of every one else is on the same democratic basis. His habit is to sit out to everybody and any one who wants to see him can see him at any time. He lives very nicely here at Washington and his brick house on "K" street is one of the most attractive ones at the capital. He is fortunate in having a wife who knows how to take care of him and Mrs. Carlisle has a very good health as carefully as though he was her son instead of her husband.

Carlisle is the embodiment of the free trade idea and the same may be said of W. C. P. Breckenridge, who, in connection with McCree, makes the Kentucky delegation one of the strongest from the south. Breckenridge is known as the silver-tongued orator in his own state. He is an eloquent speaker, is a man of fine culture and he delights in well-phrased sentences. He is a native of Kentucky and he has a speech as a three as much again as Carlisle, though he is not as tall, and he is one of the fine-looking men of the house. His hair is frosted silver, his beard is as white as snow, and his eyes and his cheeks are as rosy as the rising moon.

He is a noted lawyer and was a professor in the university of Louisville before he came to congress. Many of his speeches are extempore ones and he has shown himself to be a good all-around fighter. He is as good a fellow as a statesman, and he lives in a very nice brick house about two miles from the capitol, on Sixteenth street, in the shadow of Excelsior. Breckenridge has a curious way of preparing his speeches. He dictates the matter to the graphophone and then has the cylinders written out in type-writing. He did for a long time dictate his mail directly to the typewriter, and he is one of the men who can get through a great deal of work in a very short time.
