Baby's Wardrobe.

Baby's Wardrobe. Baby's warbrobe is often a matter of interest. It is curious that in England infants rarely, if ever, wear cape, while abroad they mostly do, and pretty, dainty ones, too, composed of fine work and lace insertion, and closely-pleated ince with bows and narrow ribbons in front, next the face, says a London let-ter to Cassell's Family Magazine. An old fashion has been revived, of long veils made of nate edged with lace, which almost reach to the hem of the closk, and they throw backensily, being of such soft compressible not. Tobbes and clouks de not differ much as years roll by. Corded stik is often now employed for the closis, which are wadded, and lined with a thinner make of sik, but the capes are much deoper, and often bordered with thick embroid-er upon muslin, and then appliqued on to the silt with a full teill of lace at the

and often bordered with thick embroid-ery upon musile, and then appliqued on to the silk with a full irill of lace at the edge. A good method of trimming cots and babies' baskets is to arrange so that the coverings are all slipped on to-gether, and then they can easily be tied on. For the cot, the curtains are quilted beneath a circle of material, and under this they are secured to the uprights; all the rest of the covering consists of a wide lace-edged flounce for inside-all in one, and tied on in a minute. In flew of madin, soft silk is mostly used, edged with lace. The basket is arranged on the same princi-pie.

"I see a great deal of tulk in the pa-pers every little while," said a man who has built many miles of railroads and contracted for any number of big engineering enterprises, in the hearing of a New York Times reporter, "about the emblem of our country. He is rep-resented as a cowardly, thievish, unin-telligent bird, and any number of other fowls of the air are put forward as ean-nidantes for the proud position of the nation's bird. New 1 am not an ornith-ologist, so I am not prepared to argue over the relative morits of the different fyers, and I must confess that the englo is a thiof always and a coward very often, but that he is lacking in intelli-gence I most emphatically deny. Let me tell you one little story of him that the in a very favorable light." The speaker was one of a little party that had just finished dinner at an up-town hotel a lew evenings ago, and his commanions jumbed at the chance of hearing an interesting tale over their case. "About twenty years ago," he began, Physicians say that there is no remedy for consumption. In some cases this may be correct. commanions jumped at the chance of hearing an interesting tale over their "About twenty years ago," he began, "I was engaged in building a big west-ern road, and one spring day we pitched our camp on the banks of one of the turbulent rivers of the region and set-tled down for a three months' job on a ravine bridge. A few days later we noticed an engle's nest perched up the blaff across the river and the following Sunday two of our mea swam the stream during the absence of the old birds and brought back two vigorous englets with them. 'We hurriedly patched up a pen of pine slabs for the captives, making it about seven feet square and leaving lots of space between the slabs on the zop and sides, so that we could have a good look at the squaling bunches of about noon, and when they found their little ones gone they kicked up a right-ful row and flew about in search of them as if they were distracted. When they finally discovered where the englists were they circled around in the air over the pen, keeping out of reach of our rifles, and shroked advice to their enicks about keeping up their spunk and making themesives comfortable as and's litie on invitations or cards. "Then the old hird's flew away and came back after a little with two big fish in their taloas. They circled and circled around over the pen, and finally let the fish drop straight as a die right between the slabs in the root. They kept up this performance every aay for a fortaight, and never in all that time did they miss hitting the pen with the shit bey dropped. Their parental af-fection and intelligence so worked on us that we put the eagles back on the other side of the river again, and I tell you it was really affecting to see the way those two old birds hung around and caressed their offspring. They seemed to understand after that that we were friendly to them, and during the rest of the time we were there they flew all about the camp and had no hes-itation is coming dows to pick up the seraps of meat and fish that we would throw to them. I can't say that they she tens over our departure, but I will warraat that they folt the mange of separation as keenly as we did."

An English Writer on the Worship of Financial Reservoirs. We shall be told that the majority of men in all countries seek for money, and that it is only the gigantic scale on which everything is conducted in the new world which makes their million-nires in any way remarkable. It is not so. Not only do we not specially decry American millionaires, but we think their quality of mam-moths the most redeeming fea-ture in the worship paid them. Money in those bage aggregates has in it such potentialities, is so entirely be-yond what any man can spend upon serf-indigence, that we can understand that the desire for it is often another form of the vague desire for power which stirs the hearts not only of the ambituoe, but of the philanthropic. It is not the millionaire, but the million-aire as the nopular deal, who arouses our apprehensions. Me desire money in Europe, and sometimes, whon they have anything to ont make of them ideals. ice in Catifornia.

A Decided Novely in Tramway Praci-ice in California. We illustrate a nove ty in tramway practice, takon from the railroad oper-ated in the beautiful town of Ontario. San Bernardine county, California, says the scientific American. The railroad passes through the middle of Euclid avenue, a broad and beautiful street, bordered with orange and lemon trees. The avenue is some six miles and a half in length, with heavy grades as it approaches the hil. The car is drawn up hill and over the levels by a pair of mules, but in yoing down grades the mules ride and the car moves by gravity, as shown in our orgraving. A olatform with fold-ing sides is provided, which is suppor-ted near one and upon a pair of wheels. The opposite end of the platform is sup-ported on the car. When the mules are the tractive power the sides of the platform are folded down and the whole which the platform is carried are of small diameter, and sort met is a spice track with the car. The wheels on which the platform is carried are of small diameter, and so the rule when applied by the conductor. The streng directly on the car, the sides are raised and the guard-rails, et vice more thatform benefit on the car, which the platform the car, the sides are raised and the guard-rails, et vice more that on the guard-rails, et vice more that form the case are of the car facility runs down the stread and at its ready for the descent the thus quiety stand, well fenced in, while the car facility runs down the grade. Bomanic Powder. Bomanic Career of a Crosk. Courthouse Detective George W. Kyan, who has just returned from Cali-fornin, saw a number of old-time crooks during his visit to the Pacific coast, anys the Cincinnuit Enquirer. One of them, "Brocky" Horton, who was im-plicated with Low Hauck in the murder of a traveling man in Ohio sovoral years ago, is doing well. Horton and Hausk were both hotol sneaks and sure-thing men, and Hauck is still in the Columbas peritonitary for the murder. Horton was pardoned and went west.
