He had also hurriedly visited the more remark-able parts of the structure and was so im-pressed by thur beauty and magnificence that he met the diva with a look half of as-tonishment and half of artifuction, for which the madame, at first, was unable to account. A. Nicolini had never seen so fine a structure devoted to journalism in his Ho. Earope furnished no counterpart, neither could its equal to found in this country. they arrived. Outside of the conclus and light opera containes, which certainly pre-sented something of a variety, there is not room for much elaboration. Columns might be written about the belles and beaux, how handsome they locked in full dress; about rare dismonds flashing rays of fire in the pale glare of an electric light; about the lashion and beaux, because all these were there, but necessarily brief accounts can hardly do the topic full justice. was no boisterous imaginage or loud talking to be heard. For once the licket specialstor was an un-known quantity; consequently there is abso-lately nothing for anybody to complain of. Not more than three or four people de-manded their money back because of the fact that Sig Tamageo failed to sing. Madame Pattl was strongly impressed with the beauty of all the appointments and seemed highly pleased with the court and the unique and beautiful chandeliers in the various halls. The lady and her escort then paid a visit to the counting room where the marble wails and rich measur floor in some respects were novelies upon which she had nover ward before.

novelities upon which she had never eased before. The press room was next visiled. Both the massive perfect and perfecting presses were in motion. They rolled out hundreds of copies with the case poculiar to the best presses in the country, which Mine, Patti considered remarkable. The lady said she had visited a number of newspaper offlece but not one of them com-pared with Tux Bgs building. She spoke about the Loudon Telegraph, the rooms of which were as illed with cobwebs that the divia was connelled to return after she had little more than passed the threshold. Her Lincky star. Mr. E. Kasewater yesterday recoved an astrological chart, which, at the diwa's request, was directed to her in his care. It showed the star under which the madame was born, and had been expressly made for her by acmirers in San Francisco. Mr. Resewater presented the chart to Madame Patti, who was greatly blocaed with it. On examination, as also by a pe-real of the explanation, it was ascertained the the diva had been born under a lucky star.

that the daya had been born under a uncay star. Pintl was naked if she believed in astrol-ogy, and realised with much caracatness that she was a firm believer in it. As everybody admits that the lady is her-self perhaps the most successful of stars, Mr. Rosewater remarked that the chart might be considered as another proof after the fact.
