

SHERMAN HAS CONFESSED.

He Admits His Connection with the Pinney Farm Murder.

THE PRISONER MAY BREAK DOWN

If Guaranteed Immunity He Offers to Turn State's Evidence and Tell the Whole Story of the Crime.

Sherman's Confession.

PLATTSMOUTH, Neb., March 21.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—Sherman, the third suspect in the Jones murder, has at length confessed his connection with that dreadful crime.

His knowledge of criminal matters led him to believe that the officers of the law would investigate everything and every circumstance connected with the deed; he knew that they were on his track and fast disproving all the statements he had made concerning his whereabouts for the past sixty days.

Upon the arrival here the party went to the county jail, but only County Attorney Mahoney was admitted. Later he sent for the stenographer and that gentleman was admitted.

Sherman was taken to the city part of the building and the occupants of that place were suffered to wander at will in the corridors while the sheriff mounted guard outside.

He was asked if he had ever gone by the name of Glover. He replied that he preferred not to answer that question.

Shellenberger, he said, had been the killing agent of the wish of Neal, and after the murder the latter remonstrated with him, claiming that it was not necessary to do away with the old people in order to have driven off the cattle.

Neal, it will be remembered, said nothing about a third party and claimed, as Sherman claims, that Shellenberger was the murderer. As violent as his antagonism is to Shellenberger, his feeling for Neal seems to be of the most friendly description and leads him to insist that Neal was guiltless of the slaying of the old people's blood.
