Prisoners at the City Bastile Nearly Gain Their Freedom. A LOCK BROKEN FROM A DOOR. The Plot Discovered by the Jailer Just in Time to Prevent a Depopulation of the Place.

A daring attempt at jail breaking was discovered at the city jail about 10 oclock last night.

W. E. Dill, the man who has been confined on the suspicion of being the burglar with the "black slouch hat," who has been compelling several Omaha citizens to gaze into the barrel of a revolver while he went through their clothes, was confined in cell No. 1, along with Charles Anderson, the tough customer who was charged with burglarizing a clothing store on Farnam street. In the same cell were a number of "common drunks,"

Friday night Detective Savage, who was acting as jailer, heard a sound in the direction of this cell, which is in the corner behind the stairway leading up stairs. The noise sounded like rats gnawing, but it excited the officer's suspicions and he made a searching investigation of that portion of the jail, but could find nothing which would indicate that all was not right.

Last night he heard the same sound coming from the same quarter and went at once in that direction. When he reached cell No. 1 he found that the brass padlock which holds the heavy iron bar across the door had been broken and everything ready for a speedy exit of the inmates. The latter were all apparently fast asleep, but when Anderson and Dill were jerked up by the officers their eyes looked anything but sleepy. The two men were at once removed to another cell, where they could be watched all the time, and the other inimates were placed in a safe place. A careful search of the prisoners and of the cell failed to reveal any instrument with which the lock might have been broken. The lock in question is a large brass one of the nost approved pattern, with a small slot in the end of the catch, which extends down into the body of the lock nearly an inch. The end of this slot had been brok-en off, indicating that the lock had been pried open, but how or with what instrument was a mystery.

If Jailer Savage had been one minute later the birds would have flown, as they could easily have climbed over that part of the partition separating that part of the jail from the stairway and from there the way would have been clear to the street.

The charge of burglarizing the clothing store could not be proven against him on account of the flight of the complain ing witness, who seemed afraid to testify against him. Anderson was discharged, but was at once rearrested and the charge of petit larceny entered against him. He made the threat yesterday that he would kill two or three policemen before ne left town. Dill, the accomplice of Anderson, is with-

Dill, the accomplice of Anderson, is with-out doubt one of the gang who have been en-tering houses and robbing the inmates during the last fortnight. He was taken yesterday to a house which he had burglariously en-tered and was positively identified by the lady of the house, who had examined the man's physiognomy over the end of a re-volver. It could not be learned who the lady was or where the house was situated as the was or where the house was situated, as the police professed ignorance on this point.

Rev. W. J. Harsha's Sermon on the Commonest Fault of Men. . Rev. W. J. Harsha delivered the following

sermon last night:

I invite your attention this evening to the words found in the fifteenth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans and the second verse. "Let every man please his neighbor for his good to edification." I hope I am not unduly praising myself when I say that 1 am a careful student of young men. For years I have watched them on the street, in the banks and in the stores. It has been the aim of my life to understand their troubles and their faults. and I think I am not doing them any hardship when I say that the commonest fault to which they are liable is selfishness. It is upon this that I want to say a few words tonight.

Now you will certainly understand that I am not confounding the distinction between self-love and selfishness. The one is right and praiseworthy, the other is wrong and evil in its consequences. One of Shake speare's characters well says that self-love is not so vile a sin as self-neglecting. He might have put it much more strongly, self-love is not a sin at all. Every wise student of human nature has pointed out that a proper interest in our own well being is one of the most important elements in our moral constitution. Without it we would not keep in check the various appetites and passions and dewhich are constantly trying un away with us. It is f the essential things in the preserv-Sires run of t ing of our health, in the enlargement of our ing of our neutral in the bringing us to minds and resources and in the bringing us to perfect men in Christ Jeaus. There have been ardent enthusiasts, doubtless, who have spoken of any regard of self as a sin; as, for example, Faber said in one of his hymns; O Lord, that I could waste my life for others, With no ends of my own: That I could pour my solf into my brothers, And live for them alone,

But this thought of entire self-effacement would be pure foolishness. If, for example, we devoted ourselves exclusively to the satisfac-tion of other people's hunger and refused to satisfy our own, lives would not be long pro-There is a curry on our foolish philanthrepy. There is a currious and instructive story told of an aged hermit, paying a visit to a brother recluse, who was celebrated for extraordinary holiness, but who unfortunately, at the time, measured only a single loaf inst his holiness, but who unfortunately, at the time, possessed only a single loaf just big enough to constitute a meal for one. The two saints had a great wrangle, lasting for four-and-twenty hours, each trying in value to persuade the other to eat it. The visitor maintained that it belonged to his host on account of his superior sanctity; the host replied that it was the right of his guest, on account of his su-perior age. When they had argued the mat-ter until they had grown so faint that they

the right of his guest, on account of his su-perior age. When they had argued the mat-ter until they had grown so faint that they could not argue at all the expedient was suggested to them of dividing the loaf between them, and afterwards going to-gether in search of more. Their self-efface-ment was very near proving their death and we would get hato similar trouble if we were to literally carry out the suggestions of many of our hymns. Selfishness is, therefore, not a true and noble love of self, but an exclusive er excessive love of self; it does not consist in regarding our own wolfare but in disregardregarding our own wolfare but in disregard-ing that of others. It is shown, not when we take ourselves into consideration but when we leave others out. Now, as I look around me, I think young Now, as I look around me, I think young men are very apt to manifest selisioness first of all, in carelessness of the comforts of oth-ers. It is not within my purpose tonight to ery out against eigarette and eigar smoking, though I think you would be just as well off without practicing those habits, but it in my desire to point out to you how ungen-tlemanls it is to practice guch things, at times and places, when you interfere with the confort of others. I am often made in-dignant by the soft-pated young fellows, who go about in fashionable garments, puffing smoke right and left, and who never think of taking their eights out of their mouths, even Smoke right and left, and who never tunk of taking their cigars out of their mouths, even within doors, unless they see a sign, no smok-ing allowed here, and are afraid of a fine. And then I think many young men are selfish in their thoughtlessness of the happiness of the home folks. They neglect to write regu-larly, they forget the anxiety of father and protocome in the for away city of All about and on the coffin were wreaths, ing allowed here, and are afraid of a fine And then I think many young men are selfash in their ibouritteesmess of the happiness of the home folks. They neglect to write regu-larly, they forget the anxiety of father and mother in the far away city or country home. And then in a second place, selfishness can be manifested in deriving pleasure from the pain of others. I do not mean to imply that you have not cut-
